La Puente Co-Operative Company's New Plant.

In the midst of a rich alluvial plain three miles due west of Covina stands the new pumping plant of La Puente Co-operative Water Company, a marvel of mechanical skill and ingenuity.

With a noiselessness that belies its power this plant that is destined to awaken to production hundreds of acres of land, is lifting from its underground course a river and distributing it over the surface of the willing earth.

It is a rare sight in Southern California to see a stream large enough to float a canoe and almost deep enough for swimming being poured out in reckless abandon and allowed to run away, but such is the sight that may be seen daily at this pumping plant. This excess of water is due to the fact that three of the wells are being connected by suction pipes through a tunnel at a depth of 65 feet. A section of the casing having been removed from one of the wells the flow of water was so strong that one of the pumps is kept running constantly to prevent the flooding of the tunnel. Standing at the top of the open casing the rush of running water at the depth of 65 feet was plainly audible.

With a system of six wells sunk in this underground river to the depth of 300 feet and connected by a tunnel 4 feet wide and 6 feet high, opening into shafts, capable of producing from 150 to 200 miners inches of water, this company has a veritable gold mine.

To handle this marvelous flow of water the company has provided the needed machinery between the wells, having three on each side, east and west. Two 200 horse-power, high-speed compound Watertown engines, with 20-inch cylinders, five-ton flywheels, and automatic oilers for all bearings. These engines run so smoothly that they are almost noiseless and without vibration. Motive power is furnished by two Oil City high pressure tubular boilers, using oil for fuel. The water goes into the boilers at a temperature of 200 degrees Fahrenheit, having first passed through a Cookson feed water heater. Not one jet of steam is seen anywhere, every fitting and joint being perfect and the exhaust of the massive engines being conducted to a big surface condenser, turned into water and again fed into the boilers.

The pumps, two in number, located one at each shaft, are among the largest and best of their kind, being the well known Byren & Jackson's No. 10 Vertical. The lifting force of these great pumps cannot be better illustrated than by the fact that they repeatedly raise round river stones of over a pound in weight from a depth of 300 feet and throw them out on the surface.

The distributing system, which is not entirely completed, consists of several miles of pressure pipe, which will probably be supplemented by either cement pipes or ditches at the extremities of the system, or perhaps both. This system will be so arranged as to furnish irrigating water for about fifteen hundred acres, and is so planned that other plants can be erected and connected, making possible thereby the irrigation of thousands of acres of the immense and famous Baldwin ranch, of which the tract in question is a part.

Much of the mechanical success of the modern plant is due to Mr. J. R. Hughes of Los Angeles, who has superintended the construction for the Machinery & Electric Company of Los Angeles, by whom he has been employed for some years.

The La Puente Co-operative Company is composed of some of the best known men of affairs in the valley, in conjunction with several Los Angeles capitalists. G. A. Nahrhood of Los Angeles is president of the company, with offices at 303 Douglas building, Los Angeles.

Those interested in the commercial department of the high school will be pleased to learn that work in stenography and typewriting is now offered during the first and second years, as well as during the third and fourth, as heretofore. The commercial course comprises the following:

Ninth year—English, algebra, writing and spelling, stenography and typewriting, drawing, and one elective.

A number of other improvements have been made about the buildings, including picture moulding, shelving and closets, storage cases with doors and new toilet rooms for the girls of the grammar school.

Hoag-Green.

On Thursday evening, Sept. 6, the marriage of Miss Hepzibah E. Green to Dr. Robert B. Hoag occurred at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. A. Green, on the corner of Oakley and Brent avenues, South Pasadena.

Accompanying the strains of Lohegrin's wedding march, played by Beryl Wilkison, the bride and groom entered the parlor, which was prettily decorated with ferns, white carnations and lilies. Mr. Amick, brother-in-law of the bride, acted as best man, and Mrs. Jamieson, an old college chum, as bridesmaid. The couple stood beneath a canopy of asparagus fern. The charming bride was attired in a beautiful gown of white organdie and carried a bouquet of white carnations. The impressive ceremony was performed by Rev. P. M. Dowling, pastor of the First Christian Church of Pasadena.

The bride is well known in Covina, having been a teacher in the High School for the past three years. The class of '07, Covina High School, was represented by Misses Alice Hepner and Jessie Klatler, Messrs. Wallace Reed, Robin Graham, Cecil Hamilton and Virgil Utter, one of the choicest of the bride's many beautiful presents being a silver mounted travelling case presented by the class of '07, C. H. S.

After a short wedding tour Mr. and Mrs. Hoag will reside in Lincoln, Illinois, for the next year.

Peck-Templeton.

At noon on Monday, September 3rd, at St. Luke's Episcopal Church, Los Gatos, was solemnized the marriage of Austin H. Peck of Covina and Helen G. Templeton, daughter of Mrs. Thomas Templeton of Los Gatos. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Daniel Lewis, rector of Los Gatos, in the presence of the intimate friends and relatives of the contracting parties.

After the wedding breakfast, the bridal couple left for parts unknown, arriving in Covina at their ranch home on Thursday afternoon.

The bride and groom are both well known in Covina, Mr. Peck having lived here for a number of years, during which time he has been connected with many of the leading business and social organizations of the valley, and is a well educated young man of sound judgment and sterling character. Miss Templeton during the past year has been one of the most charming of the Covina schools' splendid corps of teachers, and is universally liked, being a cultured and attractive young lady of more than passing beauty.

Congratulations are being showered upon them by their numerous friends.

Small Bridges Nearing Completion.

Two of the bridges on the Electric right of way across the washes between this city and the San Gabriel river are finished. The third, located just south of Irwindale station, is being advanced rapidly.

The Irwindale bridge will be about 40 feet across, having abutments and floor of concrete, reinforced with one-half inch wrought steel rods, imbedded in the cement one foot apart.

The care with which these structures are being built is indicative of the importance which the Huntington company attaches to the new Covina system.

Beautiful and Productive.

Irwindale, the beautiful and productive agricultural district adjoining Covina on the west, is rapidly assuming importance as a grower and shipper of farm produce. Almost every day for weeks past has witnessed the shipment of from one to two carloads of potatoes and green corn to the markets of Los Angeles, Pasadena and Pomona.

In addition to these larger products, from 50 to 75 crates of delicate strawberries and raspberries are being expressed at this writing to the same markets.

RUINED BY A RASH WAGER.

A rash wager has ruined many a man financially, but this wager ruined a man physically. He was proud of his strength and wagered that he could lift a ship's anchor. He won the wager, but the strain was too great for him and he broke down in health from that day.

There's many a man or woman who undertakes too great a task for the strength they possess. They won't give up, so they break down. The woman drudges in the house, the man toils in the store. They don't break down by one tremendous strain, but by a steady over-draft on their strength.

People who are run-down in health, deficient in vitality, worn-out or worked out, will find new life and strength in the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, and so enables nourishment of the body. It purifies and enriches the blood, and builds up the body with sound muscle and solid flesh.

"When I commenced your medicine my health was completely broken down," writes Mrs. Minnie Lampman, of Porcupine, Wis. "At times, generally after eating, was taken with terrible distress in stomach. Words fail to express what I suffered. My right arm was almost helpless—liver very much affected, and my nerves were so bad I was almost in hysterics. I was treated by two doctors, but all to no avail, for I was no better. I felt dreadfully discouraged, but thought I would try once more to find relief. I began to use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Favorite Prescription.' I gradually began to improve each day, and grew strong all over."

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery." There is nothing "just as good" for diseases of the stomach and blood.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cleanse the bowels and stimulate the sluggish liver.

REST.

The night is wild and weird and chill—
Rest, little one, rest;
Our hearth is bright beneath the hill—
Rest, little one, rest.

Thy father's earned thy bread to-day—
Rest, little one, rest;
The moon shines on his homeward way—
Rest, little one, rest.

Stout and brave in the winter storm—
Rest, little one, rest;
The firewood grows to keep thee warm—
Rest, little one, rest.

Down from the blue above thy head—
Rest, little one, rest;
A wild goose came to make thy bed—
Rest, little one, rest.

A sheep's fleece gave thy gown to thee—
Rest, little one, rest;
Thy cradle was cut from a great oak tree—
Rest, little one, rest.

The dun cow's milk is in thy cup—
Rest, little one, rest;
Thou mayest drink when the morning star is up—
Rest, little one, rest.

Wake not, tho' thy mother go away—
Rest, little one, rest;
Fear no harm, for God will stay—
Rest, little one, rest.

Nay, stir not at the wind's alarms—
Rest, little one, rest;
The world is cradled in Love's strong arms—
Rest, little one, rest.

THE BRIDLE OFF.

REGINALD, there are your books—
"I've read all my books, Aunt Em."
"Then I'll buy you some more books," said Aunt Em, with an indulgent smile.
"I don't want any more; I'm tired to death of reading!" retorted the little rebel.
"Why not take your bicycle and go out for a ride?" suggested the woman, who was finding her sister's son more than she could manage.
"I hate the old bicycle," was the angry rejoinder.
"Why, Reginald! And it is so pretty and so expensive! And think of your pony and the phaeton, and all the other things! How few little boys are so fortunate! How many of them would give their eyes, almost, for a chance to ride your pony!"

LEARNING HOW TO BE A WOODSMAN.

But Reginald had heard that argument many a time, and he was tired of it, as he was of everything else.
"What good does it do me that other boys haven't anything?" he demanded.
"I wish they had mine, so far as I'm concerned. I can have everything I want, and that's the reason I don't want anything. I'm just tired to death, Aunt Em, and you know it!"
Miss Emily was at her wits' end. She had promised to take care of Reginald while his mother went to Europe, and here she was, at the end of only the first week, with all her resources exhausted. She had thought it would be so easy a thing to amuse the boy, and lo, he had positively and persistently declined to be amused.
"I'm sure I don't know what to do with him," she declared helplessly to the housekeeper, Mrs. Patterson, and that wise old lady replied:
"Well, now, maybe the child is tired of everything. Grown people get that way sometimes. I think if I were you I'd pack him off to some country place, where things would be as different as possible, and I'd just take the bridle off the child and let him go. He's been looked after too much, in my opinion. It isn't good for children no more than it is for plants, to be looking after them all the time."
And Miss Emily, being a sensible young woman, turned this advice over in her mind that night, and before another week she and Reginald were in the country.
It was not the kind of farmhouse that advertises for summer boarders! Bless you, no! Miss Emily found this one quite by accident, and there was a dear, motherly old woman, who declared that she hadn't any room for them—not a decent place to put them; but who at least showed them the funnest little winding stair in one corner of a big room; and when they climbed the steps there was the dearest little attic room, right under the shingles.
Reginald cried out in delight when he found that he could reach up and touch the shingles while he was lying in bed; and when he found that the little dressing table beside the window was a wooden box, standing on four legs and curtained with lawn, he said:
"Oh, isn't that just too jolly for anything? When I go back home I'm going to have all the furniture in my room made of boxes!"
There was a boy in this family, too—

a sunburned youngster, fleet-footed, strong, agile, and as merry as the day is long. At the close of the first evening Miss Emily heard this new acquaintance remark to Reginald:
"Well, I've been kinder loafin' to-day, showin' you around; but to-morrow I've got to go to work again."
"What do you work at, Amos?" was the inquiry that followed.
"Choppin' and splittin' wood for next winter," replied the sturdy little back-woodsman.
And then Aunt Emily was startled beyond measure to hear Reginald exclaim:
"Oh, I'll go with you. I've always wanted to know how to chop wood."
The next morning, not without many misgivings, Miss Emily metaphorically slipped the bridle off her charge and saw him start for the woods in the wake of Amos, carrying the basket of lunch that was to serve them for dinner, for they were not coming home till evening. All day her mind was filled with visions of a worn-out little figure, drooping wearily homewards, and she was watching for it down the road all the evening.
And there he came at last, rushing at her like a whirlwind and crying before he was anywhere near:
"Oh, Aunt Em, I can chop. Amos showed me how, and I cut six little trees down, didn't I, Amos? And I found a dove's nest and the dove pretended to be crippled, so I'd run after her and leave the nest. How do you suppose she learned how to do that? And I'm going back to-morrow—and my hands are blistered a little, but Amos says they'll get over it. And, oh, Aunt Em, I am having such a good time, and I'm as hungry as a bear."
This from the boy that had been tired of everything. This from the plump, fretful child that had confessed that he was unhappy because he could have everything he wanted. Miss Emily smiled as she saw how well her experiment was succeeding.
Day after day Amos and Reginald plunged into the woods with ax and lunch basket, and evening after evening, when they came home, Reginald detailed to Miss Emily the woodland lore he had acquired in the course of the day.
"We saw a snake to-day, Aunt Em," he would cry, "but we didn't kill it because it wasn't a poisonous snake, Amos says. He knows by the shape of their heads, and he's teaching me. As soon as I learn, then I'll know which snakes to kill."
And another day he came home, flushed and breathless, his eyes shining with eager delight and exclaimed rapturously:
"Oh, Aunt Em, I've been studying ants all day, and Amos has helped me. There was an army of 'em down in the woods, and they carried little pieces of green leaves over their heads like flags, and when one of them fell down a crowd of them ran and helped him up. Oh, there never was anything like it!"
"Not even the pony and the wheel?" asked Aunt Em, but to her astonishment the boy replied:
"I don't care for them any more, Aunt Em."
"But you can't always stay here," she suggested. "You'll have to go back to the city some time, and then you will be glad to see your city playthings again."
"Ho! I've outgrown playthings," said Reginald, with the utmost seriousness. "Amos found out what was the matter with me a great deal quicker than you did, Aunt Em. He says that I just naturally must be busy, and the trouble with you and mamma was that you wouldn't give me anything to do."
"But, Reginald," cried the dismayed Aunt Emily, "you can't always chop wood and do farm work with Amos. Your father expects you to grow up and be a lawyer as he is and have a fine education."
"Oh, well, you know I can't be a lawyer," replied the boy. "Amos and I have it all made up. He's going to teach me all he knows this summer, and he knows a lot, Amos does! I never saw anybody that knew as much as Amos; and then we're both going to school. I'm going to help Amos through school, because I have plenty of money and he hasn't any; and then we're both going to study birds and animals and insects and be great naturalists."—Chicago Daily News.

Philanthropic Sparrows.

An incident which, the writer declares, raised the pugnacious sparrow several degrees in his estimation, is described in Outing. It shows that the sparrow has other good qualities besides his sturdiness and self-reliance.
For several days four or five sparrows had visited a certain place on the roof near my window. They always brought food for another little fellow, who never tried a flight from the spot. The visiting sparrows never came empty-billed. They would drop tiny morsels of food near the little sparrow. When it began to eat the crumbs the others set up a great chirping, and then flew away.
After watching this for a few days, I went out on the roof and approached the lone bird. It did not flutter away from me, and made no resistance when I plucked it up.
The sparrow was blind. Its eyes were covered with a milk-like film.
Necessary Caution.

For Thin, Poor Blood

You can trust a medicine tested 60 years! Sixty years of experience, think of that! Experience with Ayer's Sarsaparilla; the original Sarsaparilla; the Sarsaparilla the doctors endorse for thin blood, weak nerves, general debility.

But even this grand old medicine cannot do its best work if the liver is inactive and the bowels constipated. For the best possible results, you should take laxative doses of Ayer's Pills while taking the Sarsaparilla.

Too Early for Him.

In a western town not long ago the superintendent of a railroad was seated in his office very busily engaged in reading over his mail, when in walked a big, burly negro, according to the Buffalo Times. The superintendent looked up and said:

"How did you get in here past my office boy and clerks? You have a lot of assurance, coming in here without sending in your name."

The negro spoke up and said there was no one in the office when he entered. The superintendent said:

"What do you want?" to which he replied:

"I am looking for work, and want it all; am willing to go switching, or do anything."

The superintendent looked up and said:

"Do you drink?"

The negro replied: "It is a little early, isn't it?"—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

Why He Didn't Resign.

Sir William Wightman held office in the old court of queen's bench far beyond the prescribed time, and at last, on the eve of the "long vacation," he took a sort of farewell to his brother judges. However, when the "morrow" came, he came around he turned up smiling at Westminster Hall.

Why, Brother Wightman, said Sir Alexander Cockburn, "you old us that you intended to send in your resignation to the lord chancellor before the end of August."

"So I did," said Sir William, "but when I went home and told my wife she said: 'Why, William, that on earth do you think we can do with you messing about the house all day? So you see I was obliged to come down to court again.'—Dundee Advertiser.

He Had His Wish.

The late Carl Schurz had no consideration for hypocrites or pretenders, for literary pretenses he was particularly severe.

At a dinner in New York one night many of men of wealth who had written a volume of poems sneered at politics.

"I wouldn't give a penny," he said, "for a senatorship or a cabinet office, to be even President, wouldn't tempt me. I, for my part, would rather be known any day as a third rate poet than as a first rate statesman."

"Well, aren't you?" said Mr. Schurz.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that cannot be cured by all's Catarrh Cure. Send for circular, free.

CHINESE MUSIC.

May Contain More of Melody than We at Present Realize.

To the American ear Chinese music sounds like a phonograph gone crazy. But there are trained musicians who profess uncertainty whether the Chinese have not really advanced far beyond us in music.

The well known anecdote of the Persian Shah who was taken to a symphony concert in a European capital and regarded the preliminary tuning-up as the only interesting music on the program may possibly express the relation which our musical understanding bears to the musical understanding of the Chinese.

The Springfield Republican says: The Chinese were the first people in the history of the world to develop a system of octaves, a circle of fifths, and a lot of other harmonical techniques, back in the days when our ancestors, the European savages, had not invented even the simplest forms of melody.

Whether or not we shall finally arrive at understanding and liking something that approaches the harmonious discords of the Chinese, close observers claim to have discovered among the musicians and lovers of music a steadily increasing sensitiveness to harmonies, the existence of which was formerly unknown.

Subtle harmonies of to-day are understood, which, forty or fifty years ago even, would have been regarded as incomprehensible. The musicians have grown more and more fearless in doing things that used to be forbidden. When "Faust" was produced, back in the '50's, it was regarded by the critics as too technical ever to be popularly accepted. Now even the hand organs make easy work of some of its familiar motives.

Passengers for Train.

The average number of passengers in each railroad train in the United States in 1904 was 5.23. This represents a growth from about 30 a train in 1808, but is still far below the development attained abroad. In 1808 Germany carried an average of 71 persons in each train, and India had the large figure of 189. The development of the electric railway in the United States and the frequent train service help to keep down the average. On each of the 212,000 miles of railway in 1904 there were carried on an average of 104,198 passengers. That is to say, the aggregate passenger mileage of the country, according to the Railway World, divided by the mileage of the track, gives the figure named. In Germany, as far back as 1808, this figure was 342,000 persons; in France it was 233,000 in 1897; in India, 289,000, and in Austria, 214,000. The figures for Great Britain are not obtainable.

Only One in the United States.

West Seattle, in Washington, claims the distinction of having the only municipal street railway system in operation in the United States. With a population of only 2,000, the town maintains a traction system a mile and a half in length, with two cars, pays the motormen and conductors better wages than private ownership lines in Seattle and last year cleared up a profit of $4 cents a day. It costs $24 a day to run the system. This year they have been taking in $37 a day and expect a handsome profit for the municipal treasury at the end of the year.

The entire mile and a half of the line is lighted from the street railway power plant, which also supplies illumination for five other buildings. A novel arrangement is made for the benefit of school children, to whom the town sells commutation tickets, allowing them one ride both ways every day for a month for 50 cents.

"How did the scheme work?"

"Very well for a while, but—er—by the end of the week there wasn't any porch left."

Blame for the Grocer.

"I want to complain of the flour you sent me the other day," said Mrs. Newblowed, severely. The grocer assumed an anxious expression, and inquired what was the matter with it. "It was tough," replied the housekeeper accusingly. "My husband simply could not eat the biscuits I made with it."

WORN TO A SKELETON.

A Wonderful Restoration Caused a Sensation in a Pennsylvania Town.

Mrs. Charles M. Preston of Elkland, Pa., says: "Three years ago I found that my housework was becoming a burden. I tired easily, had no ambition and was fading fast. My complexion got yellow, and I lost over 50 pounds. My thirst was terrible, and there was sugar in the kidney secretions. My doctor kept me on a strict diet, but as his medicine was not helping me, I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. They helped me at once, and soon all traces of sugar disappeared. I have regained my former weight and am perfectly well."

The Origin of Salmon.

The name salmon is given in England and all western states to a large trout-like fish which lives in the sea, chiefly about the mouths of rivers, and which enters the streams to spawn, running for a considerable distance up the stream and returning to the sea after the act of spawning is accomplished, says a writer in the Pacific Monthly. The old males become somewhat distorted, especially through the lengthening of the jaws, but the changes with age and season are not much greater than in any large trout. The true salmon, like the true trout, is black spotted. It is called in science Salmo salar, and along with the true trout it belongs to the genus Salmo. There is only one species of Atlantic salmon; it is found on both sides of the ocean, and on both sides it becomes sometimes land-locked and dwarfish when it is shut up in a lake and when it cannot or does not go to the sea.

WHO OWNS THE NORTH LANDS?

Question Somewhat Academic, but Very Interesting.

The voyage of the Canadian government cruiser Arctic to the far north suggests for consideration the question of the ownership of some far northern lands. For many years explorers of various nationalities, British, American, Scandinavian and others, have ventured into the frozen wilderness lying between the dominion of Canada and the north pole, and have there discovered lands hitherto unknown, and have named them and planted flags upon them. There has been much international rivalry in the work of elaborating the arctic map and of pushing on toward the pole. But there has been little thought in the minds of the adventurers or in that of the public of the delimitation of international boundaries in the realms of paleocrytic ice and eternal snow. But now the Canadian government believes that thought to mind in the intimation that the dominion extends clear to the north pole, and that all the lands which have been discovered and explored in those regions, no matter by whom, are under the British flag.

Academically, the question is somewhat complicated, and might form the subject of interminable argument. There are those who hold that discovery and exploration give title to new lands, while others insist that title is not perfected without actual occupation and permanent settlement. But how if the lands in question are not fit for or susceptible of settlement?—New York Tribune.

NEW KIND OF STRIKE.

It Had to Do with Baby Buggies in a Department Store.

New York, always a city of surprises, had a new article in strikes last week, says the New York World.

At one of the new up-town apartment houses, which accommodates nearly 100 families and covers an entire block, there is a room in the subbasement devoted to automobiles and another to baby buggies, velocipedes, express wagons and other vehicles for small folks. With the opening of spring a spasm of economy seized upon the superintendent and he cut down his force of all boys. Among those dismissed was a lad who had been especially obliging to mothers, nurse maids and children who had occasion to use the storage room. It finally came about that the young woman who attends the telephone found herself drawing around the corner of the house a perambulator or an express wagon, as tenants are not permitted to go into this department. Being a good-natured young woman, she allowed this to go on for several days, neglecting the switchboard, thereby bringing upon her head the reproaches of would-be telephoners. Finally her double duties caused a mild form of hysteria, in which condition she was found by a practical-minded woman who has had some business experience.

Said the tenant to the girl: "Does your contract call for you to perform the duties of a hall boy? Was anything said about your doing this work when you came here?"

"No," sobbed the girl, "but I always go to be obliging and when the tenants ask me to put away the buggies I cannot very well refuse."

"Oh, yes, you can," said the practical business woman. "You get out the baby buggies and velocipedes, but don't put them away again; don't take that walk down the incline to the subbasement. Just wheel every baby buggy, express wagon and small bicycle straight into the superintendent's room for safe-keeping and let them stay there until he finds a hall boy to put them away."

The superintendent of this building is notoriously easy-going. When he has not some mysterious errand "downtown" he directs the affairs of the building from an easy chair in a luxuriously furnished office. On this day he happened to be "downtown" and when he returned, about 6:30 p. m., he had to climb over the tangle of small vehicles or weed them out. There was a new hall boy the next morning.

In Use All Night.

Remarkable Echoes.

President Murphy, of the Chicago National League Club, told at a baseball dinner a remarkable echo story.

"There was a man," he began, "who had a country home in the Catskills. He was showing a visitor over his grounds one day, and, coming to a hilly place, he said:

"There's a remarkable echo here. If you stand under that rock and shout, the echo answers four distinct times, with an interval of several minutes between each answer."

"But the visitor was not at all impressed," he said, with a laugh:

"You ought to hear the echo at my place in Sunapee. Before getting into bed at night I stick my head out of the window and shout, 'Time to get up, William!' and the echo wakes me up at seven o'clock sharp the next morning."—Detroit Free Press.

An Old Acquaintance.

It was the first meeting of the Shakespeare Reading Club for Working Girls, and the serious-minded young Englishwoman who had dealt out copies of "Hamlet" to the members awaited comments.

The first, says a writer in the London Daily News, came from a girl belonging to that immense army of "book-finders" so familiar to all frequenters of working girls' clubs.

"Oh, I know this well," she said, in a superior tone.

"Really?" said the pleased teacher. "Is it your favorite play?"

The girl looked at her ptyingly. "Lor, I ain't read it!" she chuckled.

"We stock 'em at our place. I've had hundreds through my hands. 'Amlet? I'm sick to death of 'im!"

His Official Title.

A little girl was asked, Who is the head of our government?

"Mr. Roosevelt," she replied, promptly.

"That is right," said the teacher; "but what is his official title?"

"Fuddy!" responded the little miss, proudly.

The right to homestead on the public domain is the greatest privilege of American citizenship, says Farming. The right to homestead is co-existent with citizenship. Every citizen over 21 years of age, every immigrant who has declared his or her intention of becoming a citizen, every head of a family, male or female, even though under 21, may locate a tract not to exceed 160 acres and after five years' residence will receive absolute title thereto.

The President has tackled another reform and attempted to introduce the Josh Billings method of spelling. After you have read a couple of columns of it the tendency is for it to run into Billingsgate.

We have heard much in the last few months about Bryan being a wiser, saner man than ever before. That he had become broader in his views and had developed in thoughtfulness. But that was while he was in Europe. When he got home and talking again, without any probability of stopping, he was immediately recognized.

The Issue.

The State convention of the Republican party nominated the Hon. Jas. N. Gillette for Governor, and inasmuch as he is a gentleman of ability and unblemished reputation, organs of the "great unwashed" have depicted him as wearing the railroad collar and being a creature of the bosses.

It will be well for the average voter early in this campaign, which we predict will be a hot one filled with mud slinging and vituperation, to get his mental equilibrium, fix in his mind the issues, and then disregard the well known tactics of our Democratic friends, of kicking up a dust and under its cover slip into office.

The Democracy of California and of the United States, has only one issue, that of office. The particular dust that our Democratic friends are trying to kick up is that of inaugurating an independent party movement, all the while crying, gruff! gruff! hoping thereby to divide the vote of the Republican party and slip into power.

We submit to Republican voters the following questions for consideration: When has the Democratic party given this county, state or nation a clean, able, administration? What have they failed to do in the past, is it not reasonable to suppose they will do again?

Is it wise to try to correct some abuses that may exist by tearing down the whole structure of government?

The cure lies in electing clean, honest, capable men to office and we submit that as a whole the regular state and county ticket will measure up to all reasonable requirements. Stand by the G. O. P.

Catalina Notes.

Avalon—This season has witnessed the greatest triumph of Catalina Island as a summer resort in its history, and although the season is now far advanced, visitors continue to pour in, the tent houses, flats and hotels are well filled, and the island generally have prospered as never before. The Catalina Island Company have excelled all their former efforts in providing amusements and excursions, both inland and by sea, for the visitors, and the fishing has never been better than it is at present. The following clipping is a sample:

Jack Prior and George E. Pillsbury, Jr., two Los Angeles High School boys, whose families are summering here, won all sorts of buttons this morning fishing from a rowboat. Their first capture was a derelict rowboat which had got away from its mooring, and was drifting with the wind and tide. Soon they ran into a school of albicore, and as one of these fish was being hauled in a big shark grabbed it and left nothing but the head. The shark frightened the fish all away, and it was time for the boys to move on or catch the shark. They chose the latter, and, baiting a big hand line, they went for the shark, and got him, although they thought for some time the monster had them. He was a big brute, weighing 400 pounds, and for an hour and a half he used his pull with them, towing the boat more than two miles before they conquered him. The shark out of the way, they took 12 albicore, and as they started home discovered an eighty-pound sunfish basking on top of the water and added it to their collection. The boys are modest, but they would like to see any two men or boys who can beat their catch.

A brief program, consisting of vocal selections and readings was rendered, following which Mr. Dana King in the name of the friends presented Mrs. Davenport and her daughter with a handsome electric lamp, the bright light from which, he trusted, would ever remind them of the lasting regard of Covina friends. A Short Talk and a Few Prices on Dry Goods and Shoes

We would rather make twenty sales at a profit of five cents each, than to make one sale at a profit of one dollar. It requires twenty times as much work to make that dollar, but it brings us in touch with twenty to one more people. As our experience has taught us that a pleased customer is the best advertisement, we are the gainer, because the more pleased people going out of this store, the greater the strength of the advertising force of the public opinion in favor of this store.

Every Friday a day of special values. In order to relieve Saturday of some of the rush, we will offer special values every Friday. Make it a point to visit our store on Friday.

Choice of any men's or women's $3.50 or $4.00 shoes Friday, $3.15. Boys' solid leather school shoes, 2 1/2 to 5 1/2, exceptional values, $1.75.

Misses' school shoes, 1 1/2 to 2, solid leather, $1.50.
 36 inch black taffeta silk $1.19.
 36 inch black taffeta silk $1.00.

Two values that cannot be found elsewhere.
 Fritzell Shell belts 50c.
 85c cotton hats 75c.
 $1.25 wrappers 85c.
 Fancy ribbons, 3 to 6 inches wide, 50 and 75c values, 25c.
 $1.50 chiffon broadcloth $1.19.

Why you should trade here. Supposing a store was doing $50,000 per annum, its net profit if run right could not be over $5,000. If there were say five partners this would be $1,000 each, a very unsatisfactory amount. In order to make a satisfactory showing the store would have to make $15,000 per year and to do this would have to sell goods much higher.

Take a store like our own. It being owned by one man, it has only one profit to make. Its rents are three fourths less than in larger towns. Every other expense is less. We can and do sell better goods for the money. While some local stores might compete with us

THE COVINA ARMS

J. L. MATTHEWS, Publisher

Covina, Los Angeles County, California

London has discovered that baseball is a game with "thrills in it."

Of two evils, some people are never satisfied until they choose both.

As to the czar and the grand dukes, they hadn't expected much from the duma, anyhow.

Alfonso may be every inch a king, but no one would guess it looking at the snapshots of him.

The importation of diamonds and precious stones was greater last year than ever before. Get your share?

Now that the stingless bee is such a success, operations for appendicitis are expected to become fashionable in the spring.

As a future possibility, the far-seeing Chicago News predicts that next we shall be going to the automobile show in airships.

The czar says the duma bitterly disappointed him. It is probable that several more bitter disappointments are in store for him.

A New York minister observes that chorus girls come high. So they do, and they kick the same way. Has the New York minister observed that?

Perhaps if the people of New Mexico investigate they will find that what they have thought to be earthquakes in Arizona trying to shake herself loose.

It is said that a fortune awaits the inventor of a sugarless, non-alcoholic satisfying drink to quench the summer thirst. What's the matter with cold water?

The Kaiser matched his automobile against an express train and won in a walk. This means that the chauffeur and the locomotive engineer will both hold their jobs.

"The Quitter at the Quake" is the name of a threatened novel. Truth doesn't have to get up very early to be stranger than a good deal of the fiction we are getting.

Professor Zueblin says the great trouble with a good many art students is that all they ever learn about art is the vocabulary. Thus we may discover the close relationship between art and golf.

Great excitement was created in New York the other day by a lunatic flashing along the street in an automobile. How he was distinguished from the presumably sane who exceed the speed limit is not stated.

An Atlanta, Ga., man was arrested a few days ago for kissing his wife in public. This should be a lesson to married men everywhere. Let the married man limit his public demonstrations of affection to calling her "Pet" or "Baby."

In this age of spelling reform, it is gratifying to some of the conservatives that an old-fashioned spelling-book was recently held in a New York public school. Let who will draw conclusions from the result; eighteen girls refused to be spelled down, and beside them stood two boys. One of the boys was an immigrant, who began to study English only eight months ago.

It remains to be seen, whether Russell Sage, with all his shrewdness, was able to make a will that the lawyers can not upset. The task has been attempted by a great many rich men, but it really seems that the more successful a man has been in making money the less qualified he is to devise it. Perhaps, after all, however, it is just as well that the living rather than the dead should have the most to say about the disposition of accumulated wealth.

Co-operation of the right kind is exemplified by an arrangement recently made between the Massachusetts Humane Society and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters. One page of the monthly official publication of the Brotherhood of Teamsters is to be devoted to articles on the humane treatment of animals, and the Massachusetts society is to furnish the material. Few drivers are cruel to horses except through ignorance, and the little monthly reminders will do much to develop the humanity and thoughtfulness of teamsters.

From the present outlook there will soon be no antagonism toward automobilists because everybody will own an automobile. The only thing necessary to accomplish that consummation is the selling of the machines for $5 down and $1 a week like installment plan furniture. Even as it is there are people "burning up the road" in high-priced machines who would have considerable difficulty in getting a suit of clothes or a bill of groceries without buying down the cash. How these people manage to obtain and maintain automobiles costing several thousands of dollars is one of the mysteries that nobody can unravel.

It is one of the commonplaces that beautiful homes and becoming gowns can be produced without great expense.

Taste is an appetite which gratifies itself by its exercise; and many a modest home is arranged more artistically than the "palace" of a newly rich family ungifted with that subtle discrimination between the natural harmonies commonly called taste. Yet in spite of all that has been said to the contrary, the taste of many rich Americans, as indicated by the things for which they spend their money, is unusually good. It is by no means uncommon for a man to give a million dollars to a college. Several men have given from five to ten million dollars each to education, that the youth of the future may not lack training in the arts and sciences. A still more significant indication of the taste of the period is seen in the large sums which wealthy men are spending on their city and country houses and on the collections of paintings with which they are adorned. Art is a luxury. In the days when every dollar that men earned had to be spent for food and clothing, or turned back into a business that was expanding more rapidly than the capital of its owner, there was little money left for fine architecture or sculpture or painting. Now that the fortunes have been made, their possessors are spending them with a taste and discretion that are the marvel of Europe. Only the other day it was announced that an American was negotiating for the purchase of one of the choicest private collections of paintings, ivories, marbles and furniture in Paris. It had long been expected that an American would buy the collection, for they know in Paris that Americans are seeking such things and have the money to pay for them.

That our American jury system is a crudely working mechanism is pretty generally admitted, even by those who most strongly uphold its fundamental utility. A year or so ago Secretary Taft in an address at Yale that attracted wide notice said that the institution of the jury had "come to be regarded as a fetish" in this country. He was thinking of the exaltation of the power of the jury and the reduction of the power of the judge in criminal cases which has been established by so many State legislatures. He felt that the way to secure improvement lay in restoring to the judge some of the power he retains in England and which is essential if twelve men acting unanimously are to be brought on close terms with the real issue in a trial. A different method of reforming the jury is that advocated by Judge Gibbons of Chicago, who in a letter to the President of the County Board urges efforts to secure the substitution of a three-fourths verdict for one unanimously agreed to. That suggestion has, of course, often been made before, but it finds little favor as a rule, though some States have adopted it for civil cases. Justice Ingraham in New York not long ago suggested it, with the added qualification, however, that no three-fourths verdict should be valid without the approval of the presiding judge. In Germany a verdict by a two-thirds majority in criminal cases is the rule. German juries are selected, however, with much more careful preliminary procedure, though with a grateful celerity so far as any special trial is concerned. It takes eight votes to convict. If only seven votes are for conviction the defendant is acquitted. If the jury wishes to affirm the existence of circumstances justifying an increased penalty, it must give eight votes for the motion. Circumstances lessening the penalty can be affirmed, however, with only five favorable votes. The system is, therefore, safeguarded in several respects against injustice to the defendant.

Electricity's Year. Engineers say this will be an "Electric Year." Electricity is soon to operate all the railroads in and around New York City; it is sending the trolley car and the telephone to the remotest rural districts; the incandescent and other new styles of electric light is everywhere supplanting the old-fashioned gas or oil street lamp; and now this mystic current has begun to revolutionize conditions of living in homes. As the motive power for countless small machines, and some that are not so small, too, in the thousands of factories scattered throughout the country, it is rapidly coming to the front, winning favor in all branches of mechanical industry.

Franks of Disease. No medical man needs to be told that even disease has its franks, and that recovery has occasionally been brought about by means inexplicably trivial. One of the most remarkable of even these unaccountable eccentricities of disease has taken place at Haver, in Westphalia. The case was that of a boy who, as the result of a very heavy fall backwards on his head while skating, had for a year and a half been absolutely deaf and dumb. One morning his brother went to awake him, and, finding him sleeping heavily, tapped him lightly on the forehead. To his amazement the deaf and dumb boy awoke with a loud cry. Both speech and hearing had been restored.

The Hot Wind from the Desert. "Khamsin" is the hot wind from the desert which blows out of the Sahara upon Egypt. The word means fifty, from the idea that it lasts for fifty days.

The "khamsin" is terribly hot and dry, and sometimes brings pestilence with it.

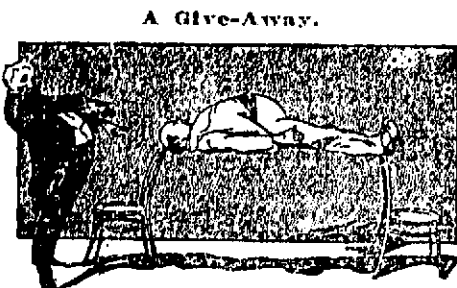

It is a distressing thought that many of the physical ills in the world might have been prevented had the sufferers only known how. Much of the blindness found in asylums is due to a destructive inflammation of the eyes occurring soon after birth, which can almost always be averted by proper treatment.

Very many cases of deafness are also preventable if treatment is begun early enough and persisted in long enough. Sometimes loss of hearing is due to disease of the auditory nerves in the inner ear; that is usually unavoidable and irremediable. But in the great majority of cases the trouble is in the middle ear, and is primarily of a catarrhal nature. It does not originate in the ear ordinarily, but extends to it from the throat, and so it happens that treatment of catarrhal conditions of the nose and throat is the best preventive of deafness.

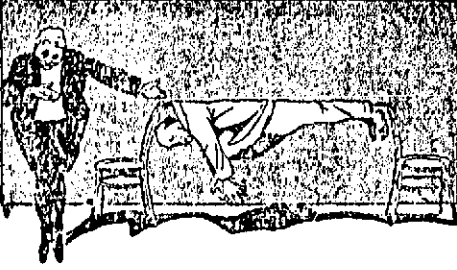

The most frequent cause of deafness in children is the presence of adenoids, or the throat tonsil. This obstructs the passage of air from the nose, and so compels the child to breathe through the mouth. The mucous membrane of the throat was never intended to receive the impact of the unfiltered and unwarmed air, which in health is both warmed and filtered of much of its floating dust during its passage through the nose. The irritation caused by the dust and the cold results in a low grade of inflammation with increased secretions, and that we call catarrh.

This inflammation is apt to spread outward from the center, passing from one point to another and up through the connecting air tubes from the throat to the middle ear. This extension of the inflammation is often helped along by the bad habit of blowing the nose violently when it is stopped up, for thus a little of the secretion is forced into the tube, and sometimes even into the drum cavity of the ear.

From what has been said of the cause of catarrhal deafness, the means of prevention can be readily understood. Any child who breathes through its mouth should have the throat examined, and if adenoids are found they should be removed. Any chronic catarrhal condition of the throat and nose should receive proper treatment, and any one with a tendency to take cold on small provocation should consult his physician, who may find some local trouble in the nose which a simple operation may remove, or may find that the sufferer is not living hygienically, or that the throat needs some remedial applications to relieve a state of irritability.—Youth's Companion.

"With the aid of my mesmeric influence I put the subject into a hypnotic sleep, causing him to remain in a position impossible in the normal subject."

"Thus!"

A Pathetic Figure. Some time when you are walking in the Rue de Rivoli, says a writer in the Mussey, pause for a moment and glance up at the balcony of the Hotel Continental. You may see a little, weazened old woman there, dressed in rusty black, with widow's weeds. Or her Paris talked nightly once upon a time; for that old lady is the Empress Eugenie. She stands looking out on the garden of the Tuilleries, where once her palace was—where once she reigned in greater splendor than any queen of them all; a dreary, pathetic figure; a text for a sermon on fallen greatness.

Penitence.

"Good news!" cried the lawyer, waving a paper above his head. "I've secured a reprieve for you."

"A reprieve?" replied the convicted murderer, indifferently.

"Why, yes; don't you see, you ought to be happy."

"Ah!" replied the prisoner, gloomily. "That simply means a delay, and I've always been taught that delays are dangerous."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Cut in Telephone Rates. To meet the telephone competition it is proposed in England to reduce the cost of a six-word telegram, including the address, to 6 cents.

A woman can put this and that together and tell everything her husband is doing. But a woman can fool her husband whenever she wants to. Fortunately, women do not often care to fool their husbands.

GIVEN LEGION CROSS.

Sarah Bernhardt Decorated with Much-Praised Emblem of French Order. Sarah Bernhardt has been decorated with the Cross of the Legion of Honor in Paris, after years of agitation over the question whether that distinction could be conferred on her.

Mme. Bernhardt is one of the few women who have been admitted into the famous order founded by Napoleon, although of its living members she is by far the most widely known and most famous. Merit in military or civil life being the prerequisite for the decoration, the field of artistic endeavor is the only one in which a woman can hope to achieve the renown that will bring her the coveted emblem. Even then, she must be a Rosa Bonheur or a Bernhardt in order to win recognition.

For many years the coveted decoration was denied to Mme. Bernhardt, although another actress, Mme. Bartet, received it more than a year ago. The first woman to be honored with this distinction was Mme. Bonheur who was decorated in 1895. Twenty years later the list of women legionnaires included less than a score. The Order of the Legion of Honor was established in 1802, when Napoleon was at the height of his glory. It became a prize for which the officers and men in the Napoleonic armies were ready to take the most desperate chances on the field of battle, and the man upon whose breast the order was pinned by the emperor himself, after some hard-won victory, felt that no greater honor could be bestowed upon him.

The decoration was not limited, however, to the heroes of war. Distinguished services to the state or the public in civil life also was rewarded by the cross, which came to be so dear to the hearts of the French people that the order was maintained after the fall of the Napoleonic regime.

Not His Age.

The oldest youngster in the Senate of the United States is Pettus of Alabama. The Southerner says that a man who does not grow old as rapidly as do his friends is at a certain disadvantage in their presence. The Senator is moved to this reflection by an incident occurring at the recent ceremonies attending the laying of the cornerstone of the new Senate office building.

A venerable old fellow, much bent and broken, approached the Alabamian, whom he took by the hand, affectionately inquiring as to his health.

"I am in excellent health," briskly responded Mr. Pettus, not recognizing the old gentleman.

"Why, don't you know me, Pettus?" came in surprised tone from the other, who gave such clear evidence of the flight of years, "we were classmates."

Whereupon Mr. Pettus remembered; and the two had a friendly chat.

When the old chap had departed, Mr. Pettus turned to a colleague, observing:

"I knew that gentleman was just my age, but God bless me, I didn't dream that I was his!"—American Spectator.

Why Ice Floats in Water.

Water is the sole exception to the otherwise universal law that all cooling bodies contract and therefore increase in density.

Water contracts as its temperature falls, and therefore becomes heavier and sinks until it reaches thirty-nine degrees. At this temperature water is the heaviest. This is the point of its maximum density. From this point it begins to expand. Therefore in winter, although the surface may be freezing at a temperature of thirty-two degrees the water at the bottom of the pool is six or seven degrees warmer.

Suppose that water, like everything else, had gone on contracting as it cooled until it reached the freezing point. The heaviest water would have sunk to the lowest place and there become ice. Had the water when at the bottom turned into ice, the same would have bled it in their interstices and held it there, and before the winter was over the whole pool would be encased in clear, beautiful crystal.

Nerve.

"Mr. Parsyde sent me over to ask you if you'd lend him your umbrella?" said the boy.

"Certainly," replied Sababba; "but what does he want with it? It isn't raining."

"No, sir; but he said it was pretty sure to be raining some day soon, and he'd need it then."—Catholic Standard and Times.

YOUR WIFE—DESCRIBE HER.

The Average Man Can't Do It, a Hotel Clerk, Declares.

"Say, you, Mr. Married Man," said a Cates house clerk to a Kansas City Star man, "I'll make a little bet with you. You've been a victim of matrimony for five years, but I'll wager a good cigar that you can't 'off-hand' tell your wife's height, weight and the color of her eyes and hair. Quick, now—without stopping to think—is it a go?"

"Sure," replied the married man. "I'll smoke on you."

"All right, go ahead with the description. But be careful—I am acquainted with her. What does she weigh?"

"A hundred and thirty-three. That's easy—we both got weighed a few days ago."

"Very good. What's the color of her hair?"

"Why, black; that is, pretty near black—a sort of brownish black, with a kind of a—er—reddish tinge."

"Get out, that doesn't go. Reddish-blackish-brown doesn't mean anything. How tall is she?"

"Well, the top of her head just comes to my chin, and I am 5 feet 10 inches. She's about—let me see—about 5 feet 2."

"What's the color of her eyes?"

"Blue—no, by jinks! I believe they're gray. Confound it! I guess I lose the bet. Seems to me one eye is blue, but I distinctly remember looking at one of them the other day and it was gray. Or, maybe it was one of my stenographer's eyes I noticed. Darned if I know!"

"Just so," scornfully remarked the hotel clerk. "But never mind, you do as well as the average man can. Not one in ten can give an accurate description of his wife."

"I saw an instance of it this morning in the Milwaukee railway ticket office. An old married man was buying tickets for himself and wife—the tickets that have descriptions of the purchasers punched in them—and he couldn't get his wife's transportation until he had gone home and taken a look at her. Fact."

The Milwaukee agent confirmed the story.

"Happens every once in a while," he said. "Funny snap but the average man only knows his wife by sight."

Right in Her Line.

"No," said the woman, contemptuously. "I don't understand her at all."

"You don't?" replied the young man. "I thought you posed as a clairvoyant."

"Well?"

"Well, she's a dream."—Philadelphia Ledger.

FIFTY CENTS

In some conditions the gain from the use of Scott's Emulsion is very rapid. For this reason we put up a fifty-cent size, which is enough for an ordinary cough or cold or useful as a trial for babies and children. In other conditions the gain is slower—health cannot be built up in a day. In such cases Scott's Emulsion must be taken as nourishment; a food rather than a medicine. It's a food for tired and weak digestions.

AUTHORITIES GIVE DEATH LIST.

San Francisco Victims of Calamity Number 452.

San Francisco.—In all, 452 people perished as the result of the disaster of April 18. The local health department so stated in a formal report sent yesterday to the state board of health. Of the victims, 206 were killed by falling walls, 177 perished by fire, 7 were shot and 2 died as the result of ptomaine poisoning due to eating "emergency" canned goods of poor quality; 351 were males and 77 females; 420 are believed to have been white, 18 Chinese and 4 Japanese. Eleven were less than a year old. The figures given relate to the deaths proved to have occurred.

The figures relative to males and females and races of the victims were compiled to June 30. Since then 10 deaths have been reported, making a total to date of 452.

TRY TO CLIMB INTO BALLOON.

Aeronauts Near Milan Have Queer Experience While Passing Over a Lunatic Asylum.

Milan.—A couple of aeronauts had a queer adventure while passing over Giandola the other day.

They were traveling low down preparing for the descent when they happened to cross some fields attached to a lunatic asylum in which a number of the patients were working.

At sight of the airship the lunatics set up a shout and one of them seized the trail rope and clung on. Others joined him, and then tried to haul down the aeronauts.

The balloonists, fearing mischief, began to pelt them with ballast to make them release their hold, but the lunatics appeared to enjoy the proceedings as a great joke, and continued hauling.

The uproar they made finally attracted the keepers, who ran to the assistance of the aeronauts, and knocking over several of the more stubborn patients, released their hold of the rope. The balloon then shot away, carrying from the ground one lunatic who had become entangled. He fell several yards on another inmate, but neither appeared to be much the worse for the encounter.

Wounded in Explosion.

St. Louis.—Two men were seriously wounded and two other persons were slightly hurt by an explosion of a signal bomb set off to start the parade of the organized unions in honor of Labor Day.

The bomb was the third fired and was the signal for the parade to start. It failed to explode in the air, returning to the sidewalk some distance from where it was fired and bursting.

POSTAL BUSINESS OF GOTHAM.

Revenue Last Year Exceeded Total of 28 States and Territories.

The only business operated by the United States government today—and that by explicit provision of the national constitution—is the postoffice. In the number of persons employed, moreover, this is the largest business concern in the country, says the Review of Reviews. Just how vast are its operations and how almost marvelous has been its growth may be seen in the development of the New York postoffice since the first year of Washington's presidency. The average receipts of the New York office for just a little over half a day, during 1905, exceeded the entire receipts of the national postoffice during the year 1789. The gross revenue of this metropolitan office for the fiscal year ending June 30, last, exceeded by a good margin the combined receipts of Alabama, Mississippi, Alaska, Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Idaho, Indian Territory, Maine, Louisiana, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, Washington and Wyoming. It exceeded by more than one and a half million dollars the combined postal revenues of Boston, San Francisco, St. Louis, Buffalo, Milwaukee and Cincinnati.

New York did a larger postal business in that year than the whole state of Illinois, including Chicago; than Pennsylvania, including Philadelphia and Pittsburgh; than Massachusetts, including Boston.

Station O, one of the thirty-seven branches of the New York office, has a greater gross revenue than the postoffice at Buffalo or Milwaukee; the receipts of station P exceeded those of Milwaukee by about $15,000, while the business transacted at four other branch stations is greater than the business of the postoffices in many of the large cities of the country. The territory covered by the New York postoffice embraces only the boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx. The postal needs of other parts of the greater city are served by independent postoffices ranging in importance from Brooklyn with its annual revenue of $2,000,000 to Bayside, N. Y., with a revenue of a little over $2,000. The gross revenues of the postoffices in the greater city aggregate $18,537,770.98.

FARMING WITH LESS RAIN.

Finely Pulverized Surface Enables Soil to Store Up Moisture.

We are just beginning to learn that if the soil is cultivated carefully and intensively it can be made to hold water within itself and carry a storage reservoir underneath the growing crop. Finely pulverizing and packing the seed bed makes it capable of retaining the greatest possible percentage of the moisture that falls, just as a fine sponge of a certain size will hold many times as much water as a coarse sponge of the same size or as a tumbler full of birdshot will retain many times the amount of water that a tumbler full of buckshot will. It is a well-known fact that water moves in the soil as it does in a lamp wick, by capillary attraction.

The more deeply and the more densely the soil bed is saturated with moisture the more easily the water moves upward in the soil, just as the oil "climbs up" a wet wick faster than it does a dry one.

The problem of evaporation is the mightiest one before the agriculturist of the semi-arid west. Even if the same amount of rain fell in Eastern Colorado as falls in Iowa, it does not follow that as much moisture would be available for plant life in the former as in the latter state. Eastern Colorado is a mile above the sea and has a clear atmosphere and intense sunshine. Its atmosphere is, therefore, very dry and quickly drinks up the moisture from the soil unless we take measures to prevent it. This we do by means of a soil "blanket" called a "mulch."

This finely pulverized surface serves a two-fold purpose—it prevents the moisture from below, in a large measure, from evaporating, and at the same time keeps the surface in such a condition that it readily absorbs whatever sudden showers may fall.

One can illustrate the effect of this fine soil "mulch," so far as preventing evaporation is concerned, by placing some powdered sugar on the surface of a lump of loaf sugar and holding the latter in a tumbler of water. He will observe that the powdered sugar will remain dry even when the lump has become so thoroughly saturated that it crumbles to pieces in his hands.—World Today.

Hall the Size of Hen's Eggs.

Extraordinary conditions must be required to account for the formation of the huge hailstones which sometimes fall, occasional specimens actually reaching the size of hen's eggs.

Thirty years ago a storm of this kind destroyed a million dollars' worth of glass in the city of Pittsburgh, and many persons were severely hurt by the larger stones, veritable projectiles of ice which came from the skies.

SPORTS IN NORTHWEST.

Large and Small Game Found in Abundance in British Columbia.

If Nimrod came to British Columbia he would experience another heyday. The sports of the forest and stream are triumphant here. Moose, elk, caribou, mountain goats and sheep, bears—grizzly, brown and black—mountain lions, or cougars, and deer of several kinds range in sufficient numbers for sport almost anywhere, and in ample quantities for ruthless slaughter in many places, so that Nimrod, whether pot-hunter or sportsman as the modern hunter are drawn, would surely find satisfying excitement and trophies worthy of his fame and skill, says Field and Stream. Small game, too, spreads throughout the country, and the biggest bags are easily filled in a few hours' shooting. And old Isaac Walton, the father of angling, would find an abundance of the "contemplative man's recreation," as the lakes and streams teem with the finest game fish.

The best big game portion of British Columbia is doubtless in the vicinity of the headwaters of the Bridge river, accessible by stage or preferably by pack train from Ashcroft, a station and little town on the main line of the transcontinental railway about 200 miles east of Vancouver. Ashcroft is also on the Fraser river, and from here the celebrated Caribou lake road, built during the early gold excitement, extends northward to Quenesh, the base for the considerable gold-mining operations thereabouts. Throughout this district caribou, big-horn sheep and white goats roam in bands. Fishing and bird shooting are also good.

And Gen. Wallace Replied.

During his term as governor of New Mexico, the late Gen. Lew Wallace shipped home to Indiana a carload of curios. This collection included a Mexican burro intended for a neighbor's child as a pet. When the car reached its destination the freight agent misunderstood the word "burro," and thinking that it was a phonetic attempt to spell "bureau" was unable to find any piece of furniture to fit the bill of lading. So, according to custom in the matter of irregularities, he telegraphed to the shipping point: "Car 28,402, Albuquerque, consigned Wallace, arrived minus one bureau, plus one jackass. Please trace and notify." Gen. Wallace himself dictated the reply: "Change places with jackass."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

The phrase of "the grand old man," as applied to Mr. Gladstone, is credited to the Rev. Edward Lloyd Jones of Manchester, England.

Evolution.

The elderly stranger, revisiting his native town after an absence of thirty-five years, was trying to find out what had become of the companions of his boyhood.

"Is Jack Olin still alive?" he asked. "I don't know anybody of that name," said the landlord of the hotel.

"Dead and gone, perhaps, or moved away. He lost a hand in a Fourth of July celebration the year before I left here. His father owned the stone quarry just east of town."

"Oh, yes, to be sure; he's still alive. He owns the bank and two or three other blocks of buildings, and he's the mayor of the town—but his name is J. Henry O'Lynn now."—Chicago Tribune.

In the Nick of Time.

The plutocrat summoned his private secretary.

"Williams," he said, "you are familiar with all my affairs. I want you to make a rapid calculation showing as nearly as possible the amount of money I have wrung from the people over and above a fair, legitimate profit on the capital originally invested."

The private secretary did so and showed him the result.

"It's a great deal more than I thought," said the plutocrat, "but that makes no difference. I shall proceed now to formulate a plan for the immediate restitution to the people of the vast sum I have wrongfully—"

But here, with a violent effort, he shook himself and awoke. It was only a dream.

Small and Large.

"Dr. Stocum is a homeopath, isn't he?"

"Not altogether."

"But he always prescribes homeopathic doses."

"Yes, but his fees are allopathic."—Philadelphia Press.

"M-m-m!" mused the doctor, with a serious face, "the glands of your throat are coated—"

"The idea!" gurgled Miss Wooddy. "Stylishly coated, I hope."—Philadelphia Press.

At the Night School.

"What do you understand," asked the instructor, "by the current newspaper phrase, 'government pork'?"

"That means," said the student, with the bulging brow, "the hogs that fatten in the official sty."

Emeralda—Weren't you afraid to go out on the lake in that little sailboat without any life preservers on board? Geraldine—O, but I didn't! Jack was along.

Trouble Center.

The small boy had just smoked his first cigar.

"Toss," he gasped, with a troubled look, "w-where was dat cigar made?"

"That cigar, my lad," replied the man who had given him the weed, "was made in Santo Domingo."

"Gee! I thought so."

"Why did you think so?"

"It—it started a half a dozen revolutions in me stomach."

His New Field.

"Now that Brown has failed in literature, what do you think he's going to tackle next?"

"Editing a newspaper?"

"No."

"School teaching?"

"Wrong again. He's going to establish a literary bureau, to teach other how to fail!"—Atlanta Constitution.

Old Friends.

Gunner—So you went down to the rummage sale last evening?

Gayer—Yes, my wife said I might meet some old acquaintances down there.

Gunner—And did you?

Gayer—I should say so. Soon as I entered the door I came across my hat and overcoat.

In Prison, 1906.

The stranger, rapt in wonder, gazed at the dazzling palace of white marble.

"And who," he said, in tones of awe, "is the owner of this superb edifice?"

"Pete Hardup," his guide replied.

"He saved half a him and some more from the great fire and opened a saloon with stand."

In Kansas.

"What's the pay?" asked the prospective hired man.

"Well," answered the farmer, "you have $10 a day and three of my darlings, or $3 a day and six kisses. Say yourself. As for as I'm concerned you take it all out in kisses if you've a mind to."—Houston Chronicle.

Latest in Men's Suits.

"I want a business suit now," said Stopy. "I was thinking of something in the way of a small plaid."

"And I," replied the tailor, "can help thinking of something in the way of a small check."—Philadelphia Press.

He Knew.

"I want to get some bird seed," said the customer.

"Don't try to plague me, smarty," cried the new clerk from the counter. "Birds grow from eggs, not seeds." The Catholic Standard and Times.

"What's that?" asked his wife.

Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Ropp gave a dinner on Friday in honor of the eighteenth anniversary of the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Christ. Only those of the immediate family were present.

C. D. Whitcomb left yesterday for the east. He will join Mrs. Whitcomb and daughter at St. Paul and in company with them will later go to Chicago for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ashton of Kucaville, Iowa, are visiting with Mrs. Ashton's step mother, Mrs. M. White. They are making a tour of the Pacific coast and are thinking strongly of settling in Southern California.

Charles Campbell, Phil Miller and W. B. Omsby made a trip to the higher heights on Saturday in quest of the game that is eluding all the old hunters this season. They returned empty handed as well as other-wise.

A number of persons from here were in attendance at a special meeting held in the East Los Angeles Brethren church on Tuesday, Sept. 4th, the object being to decide where the annual meeting of the Brethren of the United States was to be held next spring.

At a recent meeting of the grammar school board it was decided that all children who will be six years old before the holidays will be allowed to attend the school from the beginning. It was even advised that they should begin at the beginning to avoid irregularity in the classes.

It is generally understood that we are to have one more hot spell of weather before the summer is entirely closed. Then with the beginning of school and the return of the campers from the beaches and the mountains life will become normal and business be active again.

Walter DeShields has severed his connection with the Hull Mercantile Co., invoice having been made and the books balanced this week. Mr. DeShields, who has been a very active member of the company will probably launch out into business in Glendora on "his own hook." Watch out for developments.

Since the removal of the nursery stock from among the trees, the orchard of R. W. Hamlin shows off to a fine advantage. The beauty of an orchard is almost spoiled by the presence of nursery stock, and Mr. Hamlin has taken special pains in getting this fine show in property into the best shape, which adds greatly to the beauty of the street.

La Puente Co-operative Company's New Plant.

In the midst of a rich alluvial plain three miles due west of Covina stands the new pumping plant of La Puente Co-operative Water Company, a marvel of mechanical skill and ingenuity.

With a noiselessness that belies its power this plant that is destined to awaken to production hundreds of acres of land, is lifting from its underground course a river and distributing it over the surface of the willing earth.

It is a rare sight in Southern California to see a stream large enough to float a canoe and almost deep enough for swimming being poured out in reckless abandon and allowed to run away, but such is the sight that may be seen daily at this pumping plant. This excess of water is due to the fact that three of the wells are being connected by suction pipes through a tunnel at a depth of 65 feet. A section of the casing having been removed from one of the wells the flow of water was so strong that one of the pumps is kept running constantly to prevent the flooding of the tunnel. Standing at the top of the open casing the rush of running water at the depth of 65 feet was plainly audible.

With a system of six wells sunk in this underground river to the depth of 300 feet and connected by a tunnel 4 feet wide and 6 feet high, opening into shafts, capable of producing from 150 to 200 miners inches of water, this company has a veritable gold mine.

To handle this marvelous flow of water, the company has provided the following machinery: Equipment, situated midway between the wells, having three on each side, east and west: Two 200 horse-power, high-speed compound Watertown engines, with 20-inch cylinders, five-ton flywheels, and automatic oilers for all bearings. These engines run so smoothly that they are almost noiseless and without vibration. Motive power is furnished by two Oil City high pressure tubular boilers, using oil for fuel. The water goes into the boilers at a temperature of 200 degrees Fahrenheit, having first passed through a Cookeon feed water heater. Not one jet of steam is seen anywhere, every fitting and joint being perfect and the exhaust of the massive engines being conducted to a big surface condenser, turned into water and again fed into the boilers.

The pumps, two in number, located one at each shaft, are among the largest and best of their kind, being the well known Byren & Jackson's No. 10 Vertical. The lifting force of these great pumps cannot be better illustrated than by the fact that they repeatedly raise round river stones of over a pound in weight from a depth of 300 feet and throw them out on the surface.

The distributing system, which is not entirely completed, consists of several miles of pressure pipe, which will probably be supplemented by either cement pipes or ditches at the extremes of the system, or perhaps both. This system will be so arranged as to furnish irrigating water for about fifteen hundred acres, and is so planned that other plants can be erected and connected, making possible thereby the irrigation of thousands of acres of the immense and famous Baldwin ranch, of which the tract in question is a part.

Much of the mechanical success of the modern plant is due to Mr. J. R. Hughes of Los Angeles, who has superintended the construction for the Machinery & Electric Company of Los Angeles, by whom he has been employed for some years.

The La Puente Co-operative Company is composed of some of the best known men of affairs in the valley, in conjunction with several Los Angeles capitalists. G. A. Nahrhood of Los Angeles is president of the company, with offices at 303 Douglas building, Los Angeles.

A complete supply of the high school texts will be on hand within one day after the classes are made up.

Lists of the required books, in all departments, may be found at Clapp's drug store or at the high school office by Wednesday of next week.

It is desired that so far as possible, pupils come with their books on the morning of the 17th.

Those interested in the commercial department of the high school will be pleased to learn that work in stenography and typewriting is now offered during the first and second years, as well as during the third and fourth, as heretofore. The commercial course comprises the following:

Ninth year—English, algebra, writing and spelling, stenography and typewriting, drawing, and one elective.

Hogg-Green.

On Thursday evening, Sept. 6, the marriage of Miss Hepzibah E. Green to Dr. Robert B. Hogg occurred at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. A. Green, on the corner of Oxley and Brent avenues, South Pasadena.

Accompanying the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march, played by Beryl Wilkinson, the bride and groom entered the parlor, which was prettily decorated with ferns, white carnations and lilies. Mr. Aulick, brother-in-law of the bride, acted as best man, and Mrs. Jamison, an old college chum, as bridesmaid. The couple stood beneath a canopy of asparagus fern. The charming bride was attired in a beautiful gown of white organdie and carried a bouquet of white carnations. The impressive ceremony was performed by Rev. F. M. Dowling, pastor of the First Christian Church of Pasadena.

The bride is well known in Covina, having been a teacher in the High School for the past three years. The class of '07, Covina High School, was represented by Misses Alice Hepler and Jessie Kistler, Messrs. Wallace Reed, Robin Graham, Cecil Hamilton and Virgil Uiter, one of the choicest of the bride's many beautiful presents being a silver mounted traveling case presented by the class of '07, C.H.S.

After a short wedding tour Mr. and Mrs. Hogg will reside in Lincoln, Illinois, for the next year.

Peck-Templeton.

At noon on Monday, September 3rd, at St. Lukes Episcopal Church, Los Gatos, was solemnized the marriage of Austin H. Peck of Covina and Helen G. Templeton, daughter of Mrs. Thomas Templeton of Los Gatos. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Daniel Lewis, rector of Los Gatos, in the presence of the intimate friends and relatives of the contracting parties.

After the wedding breakfast, the bridal couple left for parts unknown, arriving in Covina at their ranch home on Thursday afternoon.

The bride and groom are both well known in Covina, Mr. Peck having lived here for a number of years, during which time he has been connected with many of the leading business and social organizations of the valley, and is a well educated young man of sound judgment and sterling character. Miss Templeton during the past year has been one of the most charming of the Covina schools' splendid corps of teachers, and is universally liked, being a cultured and attractive young lady of more than passing beauty.

Congratulations are being showered upon them by their numerous friends.

Small Bridges Nearing Completion.

Two of the bridges on the Electric right of way across the washes between this city and the San Gabriel river are finished. The third, located just south of Irwindale station, is being advanced rapidly.

The Irwindale bridge will be about 40 feet across, having abutments and floor of concrete, reinforced with one-half inch wrought steel rods, imbedded in the cement one foot apart.

The care with which these structures are being built is indicative of the importance which the Huntington company attaches to the new Covina system.

Beautiful and Productive.

Irwindale, the beautiful and productive agricultural district adjoining Covina on the west, is rapidly assuming importance as a grower and shipper of farm produce. Almost every day for weeks past has witnessed the shipment of from one to two carloads of potatoes and green corn to the markets of Los Angeles, Pasadena and Pomona.

In addition to these larger products, from 50 to 75 crates of delicious strawberries and raspberries are being expressed at this writing to the same markets.

RUINED BY A RASH WAGER.

A rash wager has ruined many a man financially, but this wager ruined a man physically. He was proud of his strength and wagered that he could lift a ship's anchor. He won the wager, but the strain was too great for him and he broke down in health from that day.

There's many a man or woman who undertakes too great a task for the strength they possess. They won't give up, so they break down. The woman drudges in the house, the man toils in the store. They don't break down by one tremendous strain, but by a steady over-draft on their strength.

People who are run-down in health, deficient in vitality, worn-out or worked out, will find new life and strength in the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, and so enables nourishment of the body. It purifies and enriches the blood, and builds up the body with sound muscle and solid flesh.

"When I commenced your medicine my health was completely broken down," writes Mrs. Minnie Lampman, of Porcupine, Wis. "At times, generally after eating, was taken with terrible distress in stomach. Words fail to express what I suffered. My right arm was almost helpless—liver very much affected, and my nerves were so bad I was almost in hysterics. I was treated by two doctors, but all to no avail, for I was no better. I felt dreadfully discouraged, but thought I would try once more to find relief. I began to use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Favorite Prescription.' I gradually began to improve each day, and grew strong all over."

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery." There is nothing "just as good" for diseases of the stomach and blood.

Dr. Florco's Pleasant Pilelets cleanse the bowels and stimulate the sluggish liver.

REST.

The night is wild and weird and chill—
Rest, little one, rest;
Our hearth is bright beneath the hill—
Rest, little one, rest.

Thy father's earned thy bread to-day—
Rest, little one, rest;
The moon shines on his homeward way—
Rest, little one, rest.

Stout and brave in the winter storm—
Rest, little one, rest;
The firewood grows to keep thee warm—
Rest, little one, rest.

Down from the blue above thy bed—
Rest, little one, rest;
A cold goose came to make thy bed—
Rest, little one, rest.

A sheep's fleece gave thy gown to thee—
Rest, little one, rest;
Thy cradle was cut from a great oak tree—
Rest, little one, rest.

The dun cow's milk is in thy cup—
Rest, little one, rest;
Thou mayest drink when the morning star is up—
Rest, little one, rest.

Wake not, tho' thy mother go away—
Rest, little one, rest;
Fear no harm, for God will stay—
Rest, little one, rest.

Nay, stir not at the wind's alarms—
Rest, little one, rest;
The world is cradled in Love's strong arms—
Rest, little one, rest.

THE BRIDLE OFF.

REGINALD, there are your books—
"I've read all my books, Aunt Em."

"Then I'll buy you some more books," said Aunt Em, with an indulgent smile. "I don't want any more; I'm tired of reading," retorted the little boy.

"Why not take your books and go out for a ride?" suggested the woman, who was finding her stomach more than she could handle.

"I hate the old books," was the angry retort.

"Why, Reginald! And I've bought you so expensive. And think of your pony and the plection, and all the other things! How few little boys are so fortunate! How many of them would give their eyes, almost, for a chance to ride your pony!"

But Reginald had heard that argument many a time, and he was tired of it, as he was of everything else.

"What good does it do me that other boys haven't anything?" he demanded. "I wish they had mine, so far as I'm concerned. I can have everything I want, and that's the reason I don't want anything. I'm just tired to death, Aunt Em, and you know it!"

Miss Emily was at her wits' end. She had promised to take care of Reginald while his mother went to Europe, and here she was, at the end of only the first week, with all her resources exhausted. She had thought it would be so easy a thing to amuse the boy, and lo, he had positively and persistently declined to be amused.

"I'm sure I don't know what to do with him," she declared helplessly to the housekeeper, Mrs. Patterson, and that wise old lady replied:

"Well, now, maybe the child is tired of everything. Grown people get that way sometimes. I think if I were you I'd pack him off to some country place, where things would be as different as possible, and I'd just take the bridle off the child and let him go. He's been looked after too much, in my opinion. It isn't good for children no more than it is for plants, to be looking after them all the time."

And Miss Emily, being a sensible young woman, turned this advice over in her mind that night, and before another week she and Reginald were in the country.

It was not the kind of farmhouse that advertised for summer boarders. Bless you, no! Miss Emily found this one quite by accident, and there was a dear, motherly old woman, who declared that she hadn't any room for them—not a decent place to put them; but who at least showed them the funniest little winding stair in one corner of a big room; and when they climbed the steps there was the dearest little attic room, right under the shingles.

Reginald cried out in delight when he found that he could reach up and touch the shingles while he was lying in bed; and when he found that the little dressing table beside the window was a wooden box, standing on four legs and curtained with lawn, he said:

"Oh, isn't that just too jolly for anything? When I go back home I'm going to have all the furniture in my room made of boxes!"

There was a boy in this family, too—

a sunburned youngster, fleet-footed, strong, agile, and as merry as the day is long. At the close of the first evening Miss Emily heard this new acquaintance remark to Reginald:

"Well, I've been kinder loafin' to-day, showin' you around; but to-morrow I've got to go to work again."

"What do you work at, Amos?" was the inquiry that followed.

"Choppin' and splittin' wood for next winter," replied the sturdy little backwoodsman.

And then Aunt Emily was startled beyond measure to hear Reginald exclaim:

"Oh, I'll go with you. I've always wanted to know how to chop wood."

The next morning, not without many misgivings, Miss Emily metaphorically slipped the bridle off her charge and saw him start for the woods in the wake of Amos, carrying the basket of lunch that was to serve them for dinner, for they were not coming home till evening. All day her mind was filled with visions of a worn-out little figure, dropping wearily homewards, and she was watching for it down the road all the evening.

And there he came at last, rushing at her like a whirlwind and crying before he was anywhere near:

"Oh, Aunt Em, I can chop. Amos showed me how, and I cut six little trees down, didn't I, Amos? And I found a dove's nest and the dove pretended to be crippled, so I'd run after her and leave the nest. How do you suppose she learned how to do that? And I'm going back to-morrow—and my hands are blistered a little, but Amos says they'll get over it. And, oh, Aunt Em, I am having such a good time, and I'm as hungry as a bear."

This from the boy that had been tired of everything. This from the plump, fretful child that had confessed that he was unhappy because he could have everything he wanted. Miss Emily smiled as she saw how well her experiment was succeeding.

Day after day Amos and Reginald plunged into the woods with ax and hatchet, and evening after evening, when they came home, Reginald related to Miss Emily the woodland tale he had acquired in the course of the day.

"We saw a snake to-day, Aunt Em," he would cry, "but we didn't kill it because it wasn't a poisonous snake, Amos says. He knows by the shape of their heads, and by their breathing, and by their tails, and I'll know which snakes to kill."

And another day he came home, flushed and breathless, his eyes shining with eager delight and exclaimed rapturously:

"Oh, Aunt Em, I've been studying ants all day, and Amos has helped me. There was an army of 'em down in the woods, and they carried little pieces of green leaves over their heads like flags, and when one of them fell down a crowd of them ran and helped him up. Oh, there never was anything like it!"

"Not even the pony and the wheel?" asked Aunt Em, but to her astonishment the boy replied:

"I don't care for them any more, Aunt Em."

"But you can't always stay here," she suggested. "You'll have to go back to the city some time, and then you will be glad to see your city playthings again."

"Ho! I've outgrown playthings," said Reginald, with the utmost seriousness. "Amos found out what was the matter with me a great deal quicker than you did, Aunt Em. He says that I just naturally must be busy, and the trouble with you and mamma was that you wouldn't give me anything to do."

"But, Reginald," cried the dismayed Aunt Emily, "you can't always chop wood and do farm work with Amos. Your father expects you to grow up and be a lawyer as he is and have a fine education."

"Oh, well, you know I can't be a lawyer," replied the boy. "Amos and I have it all made up. He's going to teach me all he knows this summer, and he knows a lot, Amos does! I never saw anybody that knew as much as Amos; and then we're both going to school. I'm going to help Amos through school, because I have plenty of money and he hasn't any; and then we're both going to study birds and animals and insects and be great naturalists."

Philanthropic Sparrow.

An incident which, the writer declares, raised the pugnacious sparrow several degrees in his estimation, is described in Outing. It shows that the sparrow has other good qualities besides his sturdiness and self-reliance.

For several days four or five sparrows had visited a certain place on the roof near my window. They always brought food for another little fellow, who never tried a flight from the spot. The visiting sparrows never came empty-billed. They would drop tiny morsels of food near the little sparrow. When it began to eat the crumbs the others set up a great chirping, and then flew away.

After watching this for a few days, I went out on the roof and approached the lone bird. It did not flutter away from me, and made no resistance when I picked it up.

The sparrow was blind. Its eyes were covered with a milk-like film.

For Thin, Poor Blood

You can trust a medicine tested 60 years! Sixty years of experience, think of that! Experience with Ayer's Sarsaparilla; the original Sarsaparilla; the Sarsaparilla the doctors endorse for thin blood, weak nerves, general debility.

But even this grand old medicine cannot do its best work if the liver is inactive and the bowels constipated. For the best possible results, you should take the laxative doses of Ayer's Pills while taking the Sarsaparilla.

Too Early for Him.
In a western town not long ago the superintendent of a railroad was seated in his office very busily engaged in reading over his mail, when in walked a big, burly negro, according to the Buffalo Times. The superintendent looked up and said:

"How did you get in here past my office boy and clerks? You have a lot of assurance, coming in here without first seeing in your name."

The negro spoke up and said there was no one in the outer office when he entered. The superintendent said:

"What do you want?" to which he replied:

"I am looking for work, and want it bad; am willing to go switching, or do anything."

The superintendent looked up and said:

"Do you drink?"

The negro replied: "It is a little early, isn't it?"—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

Why He Didn't Resign.
Sir William Wightman held office in the old court of queen's bench far beyond the prescribed time, and at last, on the eve of the "long vacation," he took a sort of farewell to his brother judges. However, when the "morrow of All Souls" came around he turned up smilingly at Westminster Hall.

"Why, Brother Wightman," said Sir Alexander Cockburn, "you old us that you intended to send in your resignation to the lord chancellor before the end of August."

"So I did," said Sir William, "but when I went home and told my wife she said: 'Why, William, what on earth do you think we can do with you messing about the house all day? So you see I was obliged to come down to court again.'—Dundee Advertiser.

He Had His Wish.

The late Carl Schurz had no consideration for hypocrites or pretenders. Upon literary pretenders he was particularly severe.

At a dinner in New York one night a man of wealth who had written a volume of poems sneered at politics.

"I wouldn't give a penny," he said, "for a scholarship or a cabinet office. To be even President, wouldn't tempt me. I, for my part, would rather be known any day as a third rate poet than a first rate statesman."

"Well, aren't you?" said Mr. Schurz.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a running sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and the tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

CHINESE MUSIC.

May Contain More of Melody than We at Present Realize.

To the American ear Chinese music sounds like a phonograph gone crazy. But there are trained musicians who profess uncertainty whether the Chinese have not really advanced far beyond us in music.

The well known anecdote of the Persian Shah who was taken to a symphony concert in a European capital, and regarded the preliminary tuning-up as the only interesting music on the program may possibly express the relation which our musical understanding bears to the musical understanding of the Chinese.

The Springfield Republican says: The Chinese were the first people in the history of the world to develop a system of octaves, a circle of fifths, and a lot of other harmonic techniques, back in the days when our ancestors, the European savages, had not invented even the simplest forms of melody.

Whether or not we shall finally arrive at understanding and liking something that approaches the harmonious discords of the Chinese, close observers claim to have discovered among the musicians and lovers of music a steadily increasing sensitiveness to harmonies, the existence of which was formerly unknown.

Subtle harmonies of to-day are understood, which, forty or fifty years ago even, would have been regarded as incomprehensible. The musicians have grown more and more fearless in doing things that used to be forbidden. When "Faust" was produced, back in the '50's, it was regarded by the critics as too technical ever to be popularly accepted. Now even the hand organs make easy work of some of its familiar motives.

Passengers for Train.
The average number of passengers in each railroad train in the United States in 1904 was 5.25. This represents a growth from about 3.9 a train in 1893, but is still far below the development attained abroad. In 1893 Germany carried an average of 71 persons in each train, and India had the large figure of 189. The development of the electric railway in the United States and the frequent train service help to keep down the average. On each of the 212,000 miles of railway in 1904 there were carried on an average of 104,108 passengers. That is to say, the aggregate passenger mileage of the country, according to the Railway World, divided by the mileage of the track, gives the figure named. In Germany, as far back as 1898, this figure was 342,000 persons; in France it was 283,000 in 1897; in India, 280,000, and in Austria, 214,000. The figures for Great Britain are not obtainable.

Only One in the United States.
West Seattle, in Washington, claims the distinction of having the only municipal street railway system in operation in the United States. With a population of only 2,000, the town maintains a traction system a mile and a half in length, with two cars, pays the motormen and conductors better wages than private ownership lines in Seattle and last year cleared up a profit of $4 cents a day. It costs $24 a day to run the system. This year they have been taking in $37 a day and expect a handsome profit for the municipal treasury at the end of the year.

The entire mile and a half of the line is lighted from the street railway power plant, which also supplies illumination for five other buildings. A novel arrangement is made for the benefit of school children, to whom the town sells commutation tickets, allowing them one ride both ways every day for a month for 50 cents.

"Yes, we used to sit out on the old porch in the beautiful moonlight. Strange to say, Jack never believed he kissed me as often as I accused him of doing."

"Ah, how did you convince him, dear?"

"How did the scheme work?"

"Very well for a while, but—er—by the end of the week there wasn't any porch left."

Blame for the Grocer.

WORN TO A SKELETON.

A Wonderful Restoration Caused a Sensation in a Pennsylvania Town.

Mrs. Charles M. Preston of Elkland, Pa., says: "Three years ago I found that my housework was becoming a burden. I tired easily, had no ambition and was fading fast. My complexion got yellow, and I lost over 50 pounds. My thirst was terrible, and there was sugar in the kidney secretions. My doctor kept me on a strict diet, but as his medicine was not helping me, I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. They helped me at once, and soon all traces of sugar disappeared. I have regained my former weight and am perfectly well."

The Origin of Salmon.
The name salmon is given in England and all western states to a large trout-like fish which lives in the sea, chiefly about the mouths of rivers, and which enters the streams to spawn, running for a considerable distance up the stream and returning to the sea after the act of spawning is accomplished, says a writer in the Pacific Monthly. The old males become somewhat distorted, especially through the lengthening of the jaws, but the changes with age and season are not much greater than in any large trout. The true salmon, like the true trout, is black spotted. It is called in science Salmo salar, and along with the true trout it belongs to the genus Salmo. There is only one species of Atlantic salmon; it is found on both sides of the ocean, and on both sides it becomes sometimes land-locked and dwindle when it is shut up in a lake and when it cannot or does not go to the sea.

WHO OWNS THE NORTH LANDS?
Question Somewhat Academic, but Very Interesting.

The voyage of the Canadian government cruiser Arctic to the far north suggests for consideration the question of the ownership of some far northern lands. For many years explorers of various nationalities, British, American, Scandinavian and others, have ventured into the frozen wilderness lying between the dominion of Canada and the north pole, and have there discovered lands hitherto unknown, and have named them and planted flags upon them. There has been much international rivalry in the work of elaborating the Arctic map and of pushing on toward the pole. But there has been little thought in the minds of the adventurers or in that of the public of the delimitation of international boundaries in the regions of paleocrystic ice and eternal snow. But now the Canadian government brings that thought to mind in the information that the dominion extends clear to the north pole, and that all the lands which have been discovered and explored in those regions, no matter by whom, are under the British flag.

Academically, the question is somewhat complicated, and might form the subject of interminable argument. There are those who hold that discovery and exploration give title to new lands, while others insist that title is not perfected without actual occupation and permanent settlement. But how if the lands in question are not fit for or susceptible of settlement?—New York Tribune.

NEW KIND OF STRIKE.
It Had to Do with Baby Buggies in a Department Store.

New York, always a city of surprises, had a new article in strikes last week, says the New York World.

At one of the new up-town apartment houses, which accommodates nearly 100 families and covers an entire block, there is a room in the subbasement devoted to automobiles and another to baby buggies, velocipedes, express wagons and other vehicles for small folk.

With the opening of spring a spasm of economy seized upon the superintendent and he cut down his force of all boys. Among those dismissed was a lad who had been especially obliging to mothers, nurse maids and children who had occasion to use the storage room. It finally came about that the young woman who attends the telephone found herself drawing around the corner of the house a perambulator or an express wagon, as tenants are not permitted to go into this department. Being a good-natured young woman, she allowed this to go on for several days, neglecting the switchboard, thereby bringing upon her head the reproaches of would-be telephoners.

Finally her double duties caused a mild form of hysteria, in which condition she was found by a practical-minded woman who has had some business experience.

Said the tenant to the girl: "Does your contract call for you to perform the duties of a hall boy? Was anything said about your doing this work when you came here?"

"No," replied the girl, "but I always go to be obliging and when the tenants ask me to put away the buggies I cannot very well refuse."

"Oh, yes, you can," said the practical business woman. "You get out the baby buggies and velocipedes, don't take that walk down the hallway to the subbasement. Just wheel every baby buggy, express wagon and small bicycle straight into the superintendent's room for safe-keeping and let them stay there until he finds a hall boy to put them away."

The superintendent of this building is notoriously easy-going. When he has not some mysterious errand "down-town" he directs the affairs of the building from an easy chair in a luxuriously furnished office. On this day he happened to be "down-town" and when he returned, about 6:30 p. m., he was to climb over the tangle of small vehicles or wheel them out.

There was a new hall boy the next morning.

In Use All Right.
Crinoline! Don't suppose you use that loving cup the boys gave you, now?

Yeast. Oh, yes, I do. "But I thought you were on the water wagon?"

"So I am; my wife uses it to keep her false hair and hairpins in."—Yonkers Statesman.

The wise young man keeps both eyes on the small boy with whose big sister he wants to face the person.

Remarkable Echoes.
President Murphy, of the Chicago National League Club, told at a baseball dinner a remarkable echo story.

"There was a man," he began, "who had a country home in the Catskills. He was showing a visitor over his grounds one day, and, coming to a hilly place, he said:

"There's a remarkable echo here. If you stand under that rock and shout, the echo answers four distinct times, with an interval of several minutes between each answer."

"But the visitor was not at all impressed," he said, with a laugh: "You ought to hear the echo at my place in Sumner. Before getting into bed at night I stick my head out of the window and shout, 'Time to get up, William!' and the echo wakes me up at seven o'clock sharp the next morning."—Detroit Free Press.

An Old Acquaintance.
It was the first meeting of the Shakespeare Reading Club for Working Girls, and the serious-minded young Englishwoman who had dealt out copies of "Hamlet" to the members availed comments.

The first, says a writer in the London Daily News, came from a girl belonging to that immense army of "book-finders" so familiar to all frequenters of working girls' clubs.

"Oh, I know this well," she said, in a superior tone. "Really!" said the pleased teacher. "Is it your favorite play?"

The girl looked at her pityingly. "For, I ain't read it!" she chuckled. "We stock 'em at our place. I've had hundreds through my hands. 'Amie! I'm sick to death of 'em!"

His Official Title.
A little girl was asked, Who is the head of our government?

"Mr. Roosevelt," she replied, promptly.

"That is right," said the teacher; "but what is his official title?"

"Teddy!" responded the little miss, proudly.

Greatest Privilege of Citizenship.
The right to homestead on the public domain is the greatest privilege of American citizenship, says Farming. The right to homestead is co-existent with citizenship. Every citizen over 21 years of age, every immigrant who has declared his or her intention of becoming a citizen, every head of a family, male or female, even though under 21, may locate a tract not to exceed 160 acres and after five years' residence will receive absolute title thereto.

Versatility.
"Haven't I seen you before somewhere?" asked the customer at the lunch counter.

"You probably saw me at some Igorroto village," said the ducky waiter. "I was one of the Igorroto, sub."

Food does not tickle them enough to make them act. That's Constipation! Castor Oil, or "Physic" will help to slide out one load of trouble, but they can't help the Cause.

In fact, they weaken the Bowel-Muscles more than ever by slackening them, and by doing work for them which they should do for themselves.

When your Bowel-Muscles grow flabby they need Exercise, to strengthen them—not a thing to support them.

The President has tackled another reform and attempted to introduce the Josh Billings method of spelling. After you have read a couple of columns of it the tendency is for it to run into Billingsgate.

We have heard much in the last few months about Bryan being a wheeler, sander man than ever before. That he had become broader in his views and had developed in thoughtfulness. But that was while he was in Europe. When he got home and talking again, without any probability of stopping, he was immediately recognized.

The Issue.

The State convention of the Republican party nominated the Hon. Jos. N. Gillette for Governor, and inasmuch as he is a gentleman of ability and unblemished reputation, organs of the "great unwashed" have denoted him as wearing the railroad collar and being a creature of the bosses.

It will be well for the average voter early in this campaign, which we predict will be a hot one filled with mud slinging and vituperation, to get his mental equilibrium, fix in his mind the issues, and then disregard the well known tactics of our Democratic friends, of kicking up a dust and under its cover slip into office.

The Democracy of California and of the United States, has only one issue, that of office. The particular dust that our Democratic friends are trying to kick up is that of inaugurating an independent party movement, all the while saying, graft! graft! hoping thereby to divide the vote of the Republican party and slip into power.

We submit to Republican voters the following questions for consideration: When has the Democratic party given this county, state or nation a clean, able, administration? What they have failed to do in the past, is it not reasonable to suppose they will do again?

Is it wise to try to correct some abuses that may exist by tearing down the whole structure of government?

The cure lies in electing clean, honest, capable men to office and we submit that as a whole the regular state and county ticket will measure up to all reasonable requirements. Stand by the ticket.

Gleanings from Here and There.

There were 1176 building permits issued during the month of August for buildings in San Francisco to the value of over $8,000,000. 741 permanent buildings are under construction, while 125 hundreds of temporary structures are being erected from the city dairy.

The new Palace Hotel at San Francisco is to contain 700 rooms and to cost $1,000,000 with an additional allowance of $200,000 for furnishings.

Madame Modjeska has sold her mountain ranch in Trabuco canyon, east of Orange, to a syndicate for $40,000.

The Secretary of the Treasury has ordered that the gold from Alaska and the Yukon, which has heretofore been minted at Philadelphia, hereafter be minted at San Francisco. Last year's output from that section was $23,000,000.

The new city directory of Los Angeles contains 40,000 more names than last year's book. It is claimed that by actual count 14,000 people took up their residence in that city since April 1.

Four prisoners attempted to escape from San Quentin by swimming the river in submarine suits made water proof with tallow and resin.

The Pacific Syndicate Stores Company, with capital stock of $500,000 has just been organized to operate five and ten-cent stores on the Pacific coast where fifty locations have been selected. It will be practically without competition in the west.

The Arcadia Hotel at Santa Monica is to be transformed into a military school and a new hotel is to be built at a cost of $300,000.

Pomona has prospects of an opposition domestic water supply company which will give better service and more water.

Rodlands is to have a new park for the north side which will cover about 40 acres.

Plans are being made for holding a farmers' institute at Glendora some time this fall. Date will be announced later.

Catalina Notes.

Avalon. This season has witnessed the greatest triumph of Catalina Island as a summer resort in its history, and although the season is now far advanced, visitors continue to pour in, the tent houses, flats and hotels are well filled, and the islanders generally have prospered as never before. The Catalina Island Company have excelled all their former efforts in providing amusements and excursions, both inland and by sea, for the visitors, and the fishing has never been better than it is at present. The following clipping is a sample:

Jack Prior and George E. Pillsbury, Jr., two Los Angeles High School boys, whose families are summering here, won all sorts of buttons this morning fishing from a rowboat. Their first capture was a derelict rowboat which had got away from its mooring, and was drifting with the wind and tide. Soon they ran into a school of albacore, and as one of these fish was being hauled in a big shark grabbed it and left nothing but the head. The shark frightened the fish all away, and it was time for the boys to move on or catch the shark. They chose the latter, and, baiting a big hand line, they went for the shark, and got him, although they thought for some time the monster had them. He was a big brute, weighing 400 pounds, and for an hour and a half he used his pull with them, towing the boat more than two miles before they conquered him. The shark out of the way, they took 12 albacore, and as they started home discovered an eighty-pound sunfish basking on top of the water and added it to their collection. The boys are modest, but they would like to see any two men or boys who can beat their catch.

Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Sherwood and family and Mrs. Clarke and family of Covina are occupying cottages on Morilla avenue and the Covina colony now here expect to receive several accessions to their number the first of next week.

A Short Talk and a Few Prices on Dry Goods and Shoes

We would rather make twenty sales at a profit of five cents each, than to make one sale at a profit of one dollar. It requires twenty times as much work to make that dollar, but it brings us in touch with twenty to one more people. As our experience has taught us that a pleased customer is the best advertisement, we are the gainer, because the more pleased people going out of this store, the greater the strength of the advertising force of the public opinion in favor of this store.

Every Friday a day of special values. In order to relieve Saturday of some of the rush, we will offer special values every Friday. Make it a point to visit our store on Friday.

Choice of any men's or women's $3.50 or $4.00 shoe Friday, $3.15.

Boys' solid leather school shoes, 2 1/2 to 5 1/2, exceptional values, $1.75.

Misses' school shoes, 11 1/2 to 2, solid leather, $1.50.

36 inch black taffeta silk $1.19.

36 inch black taffeta silk $1.19.

Two values that cannot be found elsewhere.

Fritz Sheff belts 50c.

85c cotton bath 75c.

$1.25 wrappes 85c.

Fancy ribbons, 3 to 6 inches wide, 50 and 75c values, 25c.

$1.50 chiffon broadcloth $1.19.

Why you should trade here. Supposing a store was doing $50,000 per annum, its net profit if run right could not be over $5,000. If there were say five partners this would be $1,000 each, a very satisfactory amount. In order to make a satisfactory factory showing the store would have to make $15,000 per year and to do this would have to sell goods much higher.

Take a store like our own. It being owned by one man, it has only one profit to make. Its profits are three fourths less than in larger towns. Every other expense is less. We can and do sell better goods for the money. While some local stores might compete with us

Of two evils, some people are never satisfied until they choose both.

As to the Czar and the grand dukes, they hadn't expected much from the duma, anyhow.

Alfonso may be every inch a king, but no one would guess it looking at the snapshots of him.

The importation of diamonds and precious stones was greater last year than ever before. Get your share?

Now that the stingless bee is such a success, operations for appendicitis are expected to become fashionable in the spring.

As a future possibility, the far-seeing Chicago News predicts that next we shall be going to the automobile show in airships.

The Czar says the duma bitterly disappointed him. It is probable that several more bitter disappointments are in store for him.

A New York minister observes that chorus girls come high. So they do, and they kick the same way. Has the New York minister observed that?

Perhaps if the people of New Mexico investigate they will find that what they have thought to be earthquakes in Arizona trying to shake herself loose.

It is said that a fortune awaits the inventor of a sugarless, non-alcoholic satisfying drink to quench the summer thirst. What's the matter with cold water?

The Kaiser matched his automobile against an express train and won in a walk. This means that the chauffeur and the locomotive engineer will both hold their jobs.

"The Quicker at the Quake" is the name of a threatened novel. Truth doesn't have to get up very early to be stranger than a good deal of the fiction we are getting.

Professor Zuehlke says the great trouble with a good many art students is that all they ever learn about art is the vocabulary. Thus we may discover the close relationship between art and golf.

Great excitement was created in New York the other day by a lunatic flashing along the street in an automobile. How he was distinguished from the presumably sane who exceed the speed limit is not stated.

An Atlanta, Ga., man was arrested a few days ago for kissing his wife in public. This should be a lesson to married men everywhere. Let the married man limit his public demonstrations of affection to calling her "Pet" or "Baby."

In this age of spelling reform, it is gratifying to some of the conservatives that an old-fashioned spelling-bee was recently held in a New York public school. Let who will draw conclusions from the result; eighteen girls refused to be spelled down, and beside them stood two boys. One of the boys was an immigrant, who began to study English only eight months ago.

It remains to be seen, whether Russell Sage, with all his shrewdness, was able to make a will that the lawyers can not upset. The task has been attempted by a great many rich men, but it really seems that the more successful a man has been in making money the less qualified he is to devise it. Perhaps, after all, however, it is just as well that the living rather than the dead should have the most to say about the disposition of accumulated wealth.

Co-operation of the right kind is exemplified by an arrangement recently made between the Massachusetts Humane Society and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters. One page of the monthly official publication of the Brotherhood of Teamsters is to be devoted to articles on the humane treatment of animals, and the Massachusetts society is to furnish the material. Few drivers are cruel to horses except through ignorance, and the little monthly reminders will do much to develop the humanity and thoughtfulness of teamsters.

From the present outlook there will soon be no antagonism toward automobile because everything will own an automobile. The only thing necessary to accomplish that consummation is the selling of the machines for $5 down and $1 a week like installment plan furniture. Even as it is there are people "burning up the road" in high-priced machines who would have considerable difficulty in getting a suit of clothes or a bill of groceries without laying down the cash. How these people manage to obtain and maintain automobiles costing several thousands of dollars is one of the mysteries that nobody can unravel.

It is one of the commonplaces that beautiful homes and becoming gowns can be produced without great expense.

Taste is an appetite which gratifies itself by its exercise; and many a modest home is arranged more artistically than the "palace" of a newly rich family ungifted with that subtle discrimination between the natural harmonies commonly called taste. Yet in spite of all that has been said to the contrary, the taste of many rich Americans, as indicated by the things for which they spend their money, is unusually good. It is by no means uncommon for a man to give a million dollars to a college. Several men have given from five to ten million dollars each to education, that the youth of the future may not lack training in the arts and sciences. A still more significant indication of the taste of the period is seen in the large sums which wealthy men are spending on their city and country houses and on the collections of paintings with which they are adorned. Art is a luxury. In the days when every dollar that men earned had to be spent for food and clothing, or turned back into a business that was expanding more rapidly than the capital of its owner, there was little money left for fine architecture or sculpture or painting. Now that the fortunes have been made, their possessors are spending them with a taste and discretion that are the marvel of Europe. Only the other day it was announced that an American was negotiating for the purchase of one of the choicest private collections of paintings, bronzes, marbles and furniture in Paris. It had long been expected that an American would buy the collection, for they know in Paris that Americans are seeking such things and have the money to pay for them.

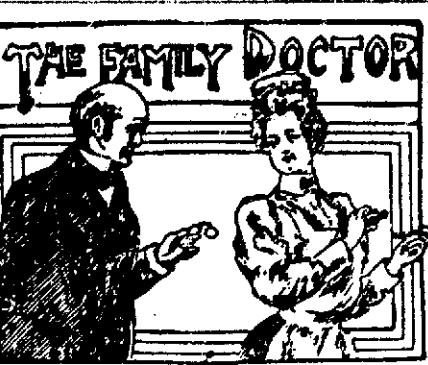

That our American jury system is a crudely working mechanism is pretty generally admitted, even by those who most strongly uphold its fundamental utility. A year or so ago Secretary Taft in an address at Yale that attracted wide notice said that the institution of the jury had "come to be regarded as a fetish" in this country. He was thinking of the exaltation of the power of the jury and the reduction of the power of the judge in criminal cases which has been established by so many State legislatures. He felt that the way to secure improvement lay in restoring to the judge some of the power he retains in England and which is essential if twelve men acting unanimously are to be brought on close terms with the real issue in a trial. A different method of reforming the jury is that advocated by Judge Gibbons of Chicago, who in a letter to the President of the County Board urges efforts to secure the substitution of a three-fourths verdict for one unanimously agreed to. That suggestion has, of course, often been made before, but it finds little favor as a rule, though some States have adopted it for civil cases. Justice Ingraham in New York not long ago suggested it, with the added qualification, however, that no three-fourths verdict should be valid without the approval of the presiding judge. In Germany a verdict by a two-thirds majority in criminal cases is the rule. German juries are selected, however, with much more careful preliminary procedure, though with a grateful celerity so far as any special trial is concerned. It takes eight votes to convict. If only seven votes are for conviction the defendant is acquitted. If the jury wishes to affirm the existence of circumstances justifying an increased penalty, it must give eight votes for the motion. Circumstances lessening the penalty can be affirmed, however, with only five favorable votes. The system is, therefore, safeguarded in several respects against injustice to the defendant.

Electricity's Year.
Engineers say this will be an "Electric Year." Electricity is soon to operate all the railroads in and around New York City; it is sending the trolley car and the telephone to the remotest rural districts; the incandescent and other new styles of electric light is everywhere supplanting the old-fashioned gas or oil street lamp; and now this mystic current has begun to revolutionize conditions of living in homes. As the motive power for countless small machines, and some that are not so small, too, in the thousands of factories scattered throughout the country, it is rapidly coming to the front, winning favor in all branches of mechanical industry.

Freaks of Disease.
No medical man needs to be told that even disease has its freaks, and that recovery has occasionally been brought about by means inexplicably trivial. One of the most remarkable of even these unaccountable occurrences of disease has taken place at Halver, in Westphalia. The case was that of a boy who, as the result of a very heavy fall backwards on his head while skating, had for a year and a half been absolutely deaf and dumb. One morning his brother went to awake him, and finding him sleeping heavily, tapped him lightly on the forehead. To his amazement the deaf and dumb boy awoke with a loud cry. Both speech and hearing had been restored.

The Hot Wind from the Desert.
"Khamsin" is the hot wind from the desert which blows out of the Sahara upon Egypt. The word means after, from the idea that it lasts for fifty days.

The "khamsin" is terribly hot and dry, and sometimes brings pestilence with it.

It is a distressing thought that many of the physical ills in the world might have been prevented had the sufferers only known how. Much of the blindness found in asylums is due to a destructive inflammation of the eyes occurring soon after birth, which can almost always be averted by proper treatment.

Very many cases of deafness are also preventable if treatment is begun early enough and persisted in long enough.

Sometimes loss of hearing is due to disease of the auditory nerves in the inner ear; that is usually unavoidable and irremediable. But in the great majority of cases the trouble is in the middle ear, and is primarily of a catarrhal nature. It does not originate in the ear ordinarily, but extends to it from the throat, and so it happens that treatment of catarrhal conditions of the nose and throat is the best preventive of deafness.

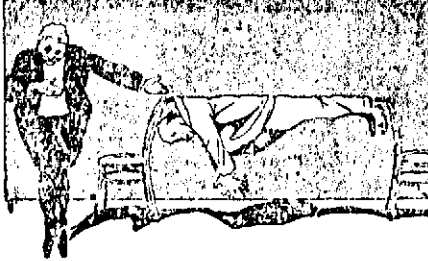

The most frequent cause of deafness in children is the presence of adenoids, or the throat tonsil. This obstructs the passage of air from the nose, and so compels the child to breathe through the mouth. The mucous membrane of the throat was never intended to receive the impact of the unfiltered and unwarmed air, which in health is both warmed and filtered of much of its floating dust during its passage through the nose. The irritation caused by the dust and the cold results in a low grade of inflammation with increased secretions, and that we call catarrh.

This inflammation is apt to spread outward from the center, passing from one point to another and up through the connecting air tubes from the throat to the middle ear. This extension of the inflammation is often helped along by the bad habit of blowing the nose violently when it is stopped up, for thus a little of the secretion is forced into the tube, and sometimes even into the drum cavity of the ear.

From what has been said of the cause of catarrhal deafness, the means of prevention can be readily understood. Any child who breathes through its mouth should have the throat examined, and if adenoids are found they should be removed. Any chronic catarrhal condition of the throat and nose should receive proper treatment, and any one with a tendency to take cold on small provocation should consult his physician, who may find some local trouble in the nose which a simple operation may remove, or may find that the sufferer is not living hygienically, or that the throat needs some remedial applications to relieve a state of irritability.—Youth's Companion.

A Pathetic Figure.
Some time when you are waiting in the line de Rivoli, says a writer in the Muses, pause for a moment and glance up at the balcony of the Hotel Continental. You may see a little, womanly old woman there, dressed in rusty black, with widow's weeds. Or her curls twisted tightly once upon a time; for that old lady is the Empress Eugenie. She stands looking out on the gardens of the Tuileries, where in her palace was where once she reigned in greater splendor than any queen of them all; a dreary, pathetic figure; a text for a sermon on fallen greatness.

Pessimistic.
"Good news!" cried the lawyer, waving a paper above his head. "I've secured a reprieve for you!"
"A reprieve?" replied the convicted murderer, indifferently.
"Why, yes; don't you see, you ought to be hanged!"
"Ah!" replied the prisoner, gloomily. "That simply means a delay, and I've always been taught that delays are dangerous."—Catholic Standard and Times.

GIVEN LEGION CROSS.

Bernhardt Decorated with Much-Prized Emblem of French Order. Sarah Bernhardt has been decorated with the Cross of the Legion of Honor in Paris, after years of agitation over the question whether that distinction could be conferred on her.

Mme. Bernhardt is one of the few women who have been admitted into the famous order founded by Napoleon, although of its living members she is by far the most widely known and most famous. Merit in military or civil life being the prerequisite for the decoration, the field of artistic endeavor is the only one in which a woman can hope to achieve the renown that will bring her the coveted emblem. Even then, she must be a Rosa Bonheur or a Bernhardt in order to win recognition.

For many years the coveted decoration was denied to Mme. Bernhardt, although another actress, Mme. Bartet, received it more than a year ago. The first woman to be honored with this distinction was Mme. Bonheur who was decorated in 1865. Twenty years later the list of women legionaries included less than a score.

The Order of the Legion of Honor was established in 1802, when Napoleon was at the height of his glory. It became a prize for which the officers and men in the Napoleonic armies were ready to take the most desperate chances on the field of battle, and the man upon whose breast the order was pinned by the emperor himself, after some hard-won victory, felt that no greater honor could be bestowed upon him.

The decoration was not limited, however, to the heroes of war. Distinguished service to the state or the public in civil life also was rewarded by the cross, which came to be so dear to the hearts of the French people that the order was maintained after the fall of the Napoleonic regime.

Not His Age.
The oldest youngster in the Senate of the United States is Pettus of Alabama. The Southerner says that a man who does not grow old as rapidly as do his friends is at a certain disadvantage in their presence. The Senator is moved to this reflection by an incident occurring at the recent ceremonies attending the laying of the cornerstone of the new Senate office building.

A venerable old fellow, much bent and broken, approached the Alabamian, whom he took by the hand, affectionately inquiring as to his health.

"I am in excellent health," briskly responded Mr. Pettus, not recognizing the old gentleman.

"Why, don't you know me, Pettus?" came in surprised tone from the other, who gave such clear evidence of the flight of years, "we were classmates."

Whereupon Mr. Pettus remembered, and the two had a friendly chat.

When the old chap had departed, Mr. Pettus turned to a colleague, observing:

"I knew that gentleman was just my age, but God bless me, I didn't dream that he was!"—American Spectator.

Why Ice Floats in Water.
Water is the sole exception to the otherwise universal law that all cooling bodies contract and therefore increase in density.

Water contracts as its temperature falls, and therefore becomes heavier and sinks until it reaches thirty-nine degrees. At this temperature water is the heaviest. This is the point of its maximum density. From this point it begins to expand. Therefore in winter although the surface may be freezing at a temperature of thirty-two degrees the water at the bottom of the pool is six or seven degrees warmer.

Suppose that water, like everything else, had gone on contracting as it cooled, until it reached the freezing point. The heaviest water would have sunk to the lowest place and there become ice. Had the water when at the bottom turned into ice, the ice would have broken it in their interstices and held it there, and before the winter was over the whole pool would be encased in clear, beautiful crystal.

YOUR WIFE—DESCRIBE HER.

The Average Man Can't Do It, a Hotel Clerk, Declares.

"Say, you, Mr. Married Man," said a Cates house clerk to a Kansas City Star man, "I'll make a little bet with you. You've been a victim of matrimony for five years, but I'll wager a good cigar that you can't 'off-hand' tell your wife's height, weight and the color of her eyes and hair. Quick, now—without stopping to think—is it a go?"

"Sure," replied the married man. "I'll smoke on you."

"All right, go ahead with the description. But be careful—I am acquainted with her. What does she weigh?"

"A hundred and thirty-three. That's easy—we both got weighed a few days ago."

"Very good. What's the color of her hair?"

"Why, black; that is, pretty near black—a sort of brownish black, with a kind of a—er—reddish tinge."

"Get out, that doesn't go. Reddish-blackish-brown doesn't mean anything. How tall is she?"

"Well, the top of her head just comes to my chin, and I am 5 feet 10 inches. She's about—let me see—5 feet 2."

"What's the color of her eyes?"

"Blue—no, by Jinks! I believe they're gray. Confound it! I guess I lose the bet. Seems to me one eye is blue, but I distinctly remember looking at one of them the other day and it was gray. Or, maybe it was one of my stenographer's eyes I noticed. Darned if I know!"

"Just so," scornfully remarked the hotel clerk. "But never mind, you do as well as the average man can. Not one in ten can give an accurate description of his wife."

"I saw an instance of it this morning in the Milwaukee railway ticket office. An old married man was buying tickets for himself and wife—the tickets that have descriptions of the purchasers punched in them—and he couldn't get his wife's transportation until he had gone home and taken a look at her. Fact."

The Milwaukee agent confirmed the story.

"Happens every once in a while," he said. "Funny snap but the average man only knows his wife by sight."

"No," said the woman, contemptuously. "I don't understand her at all."

"You don't?" replied the young man. "I thought you posed as a clairvoyant."

"Well?"

"Well, she's a dream."—Philadelphia Ledger.

FIFTY CENTS

In some conditions the gain from the use of Scott's Emulsion is very rapid. For this reason we put up a fifty-cent size, which is enough for an ordinary cough or cold or useful as a trial for babies and children. In other conditions the gain is slower—health cannot be built up in a day. In such cases Scott's Emulsion must be taken as nourishment; a food rather than a medicine. It's a food for tired and weak digestions.

AUTHORITIES GIVE DEATH LIST.

San Francisco Victims of Calamity Number 452.

San Francisco.—In all, 452 people perished as the result of the disaster of April 18. The local health department so stated in a formal report sent yesterday to the state board of health. Of the victims, 206 were killed by falling walls, 177 perished by fire, 7 were shot and 2 died as the result of ptomaine poisoning due to eating "emergency" canned goods of poor quality; 351 were males and 77 females; 420 are believed to have been white, 18 Chinese and 4 Japanese. Eleven were less than a year old. The figures given relate to the deaths proved to have occurred.

The figures relative to males and females and races of the victims were compiled to June 30. Since then 10 deaths have been reported, making a total to date of 452.

TRY TO CLIMB INTO BALLOON.

Aeronauts Near Milan Have Queer Experience While Passing Over a Lunatic Asylum.

Milan.—A couple of aeronauts had a queer adventure while passing over Glandola the other day.

They were traveling low down preparing for the descent when they happened to cross some fields attached to a lunatic asylum in which a number of the patients were working.

At sight of the airship the lunatics set up a shout and one of them seized the trail rope and clung on. Others joined him, and then tried to haul down the aeronauts.

The balloonists, fearing mischief, began to pelt them with ballast to make them release their hold, but the lunatics appeared to enjoy the proceedings as a great joke, and continued hauling.

The uproar they made finally attracted the keepers, who ran to the assistance of the aeronauts, and knocking over several of the more stubborn patients, released their hold of the rope. The balloon then shot away, carrying from the ground one lunatic who had become entangled. He fell several yards on another inmate, but neither appeared to be much the worse for the encounter.

Wounded in Explosion.

St. Louis.—Two men were seriously wounded and two other persons were slightly hurt by an explosion of a signal bomb set off to start the parade of the organized unions in honor of Labor Day.

The bomb was the third fired and was the signal for the parade to start. It failed to explode in the air, returning to the sidewalk some distance from where it was fired and bursting.

POSTAL BUSINESS OF GOTHAM.

Revenue Last Year Exceeded Total of 25 States and Territories.

The only business operated by the United States government today—and that by explicit provision of the national constitution—is the postoffice. In the number of persons employed, moreover, this is the largest business concern in the country, says the Review of Reviews. Just how vast are its operations and how almost marvelous has been its growth may be seen in the development of the New York postoffice since the first year of Washington's presidency. The average receipts of the New York office for just a little over half a day, during 1905, exceeded the entire receipts of the national postoffice during the year 1789. The gross revenue of this metropolitan office for the fiscal year ending June 30, last, exceeded by a good margin the combined receipts of Alabama, Mississippi, Alaska, Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Idaho, Indian Territory, Maine, Louisiana, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, Washington and Wyoming. It exceeded by more than one and a half million dollars the combined postal revenues of Boston, San Francisco, St. Louis, Buffalo, Milwaukee and Cincinnati.

New York did a larger postal business in that year than the whole state of Illinois, including Chicago; than Pennsylvania, including Philadelphia and Pittsburgh; than Massachusetts, including Boston. Station O, one of the thirty-seven branches of the New York office, has a greater gross revenue than the postoffice at Buffalo or Milwaukee; the receipts of station P exceeded those of Milwaukee by about $15,000, while the business transacted at four other branch stations is greater than the business of the postoffices in many of the large cities of the country. The territory covered by the New York postoffice embraces only the boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx. The postal needs of other parts of the great city are served by independent post-offices ranging in importance from Brooklyn with its annual revenue of $2,000,000 to Bayside, N. Y., with a revenue of a little over $2,000. The gross revenues of the postoffices in the greater city aggregate $18,527,770.98.

FARMING WITH LESS RAIN.

Finely Pulverized Surface Enables Soil to Store Up Moisture.

We are just beginning to learn that if the soil is cultivated carefully and intensively it can be made to hold water within itself and carry a storage reservoir underneath the growing crop. Finely pulverizing and packing the seed bed makes it capable of retaining the greatest possible percentage of the moisture that falls, just as a fine sponge of a certain size will hold many times as much water as a coarse sponge of the same size or as a tumbler full of birdshot will retain many times the amount of water that a tumbler full of buckshot will. It is a well-known fact that water moves in the soil as it does in a lamp wick, by capillary attraction.

The more deeply and the more densely the soil bed is saturated with moisture the more easily the water moves upward in the soil, just as the oil "climbs up" a wet wick faster than it does a dry one.

The problem of evaporation is the mightiest one before the agriculturist of the semi-arid west. Even if the same amount of rain fell in Eastern Colorado as falls in Iowa, it does not follow that as much moisture would be available for plant life in the former as in the latter state. Eastern Colorado is a mile above the sea and has a clear atmosphere and intense sunshine. Its atmosphere is, therefore, very dry and quickly drinks up the moisture from the soil unless we take measures to prevent it. This we do by means of a soil "blanket" called a "mulch."

This finely pulverized surface serves a two-fold purpose—it prevents the moisture from below, in a large measure, from evaporating, and at the same time keeps the surface in such a condition that it readily absorbs whatever sudden showers may fall.

One can illustrate the effect of this fine soil "mulch," so far as preventing evaporation is concerned, by placing some powdered sugar on the surface of a lump of loaf sugar and holding the latter in a tumbler of water. He will observe that the powdered sugar will remain dry even when the lump has become so thoroughly saturated that it crumbles to pieces in his hands.—World Today.

Hall the Size of Hen's Eggs.

Extraordinary conditions must be required to account for the formation of the huge hailstones which sometimes fall, occasional specimens actually reaching the size of hen's eggs.

Thirty years ago a storm of this kind destroyed a million dollars' worth of glass in the city of Pittsburgh and many persons were severely hurt by the larger stones which were projected by the ice which carried them.

SPORTS IN NORTHWEST.

Large and Small Game Found in Abundance in British Columbia.

If Nimrod came to British Columbia he would experience another heyday. The sports of the forest and stream are triumphant here. Moose, elk, caribou, mountain goats and sheep, bears—grizzly, brown and black—mountain lions, or cougars, and deer of several kinds range in sufficient numbers for sport almost anywhere, and in ample quantities for ruthless slaughter in many places, so that Nimrod, whether pot-hunter or sportsman, as the modern lines are drawn, would surely find satisfying excitement and trophies worthy of his fame and skill, says Field and Stream. Small game, too, spreads throughout the country, and the biggest ones are easily killed in a few hours' shooting. And old Isaac Walton, the father of angling, would find an abundance of the "contemplative man's recreation," as the lakes and streams teem with the finest game fish.

The best big game portion of British Columbia is doubtless in the vicinity of the headwaters of the Bridge river, accessible by stage or preferably by pack train from Ashcroft, a station on the little town on the main line of the transcontinental railway about 200 miles east of Vancouver. Ashcroft is also on the Fraser river, and from here the celebrated Caribou trail leads built during the early gold excitement, extends northward to Quesnel, the base for the considerable gold-mining operations thereabout. Throughout this district caribou, big horn sheep and white goats roam in bands. Fishing and bird shooting are also good.

And Gen. Wallace Replied.

During his term as governor of New Mexico, the late Gen. Lew Wallace shipped home to Indiana a carload of curios. This collection included a Mexican burro intended for a neighbor's child as a pet. When the car reached its destination the freight agent misunderstood the word "burro," and thinking that it was a phonetic attempt to spell "bureau" was unable to find any place of furniture to fit the bill of lading. So, according to custom in the matter of irregularities, he telegraphed to the shipping point: "Car 23,192, Albuquerque, consigned Wallace, arrived minus one bureau, plus one jackass. Please trace and notify." Gen. Wallace himself debated the reply: "Change places with jackass."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

The phrase of "the grand old man" as applied to Mr. Gladstone, is credited to the Rev. Edward Lloyd Jones of Manchester, England.

Evolution.

The elderly stranger, revisiting his native town after an absence of thirty-five years, was trying to find out what had become of the companions of his boyhood.

"Is Jack Old still alive?" he asked. "I don't know anybody of that name," said the landlord of the hotel.

"Dead and gone, perhaps, or moved away. He lost a hand in a Fourth of July celebration the year before I left here. His father owned the stone quarry just east of town."

"Oh, yes, to be sure; he's still alive. He owns the bank and two or three other blocks of buildings, and he's the mayor of the town—but his name is J. Henry O'Lynn now."—Chicago Tribune.

In the Nick of Time.

The plutocrat summoned his private secretary.

"Williams," he said, "you are familiar with all my affairs. I want you to make a rapid calculation showing as nearly as possible the amount of money I have wronged from the people over and above a fair, legitimate profit on the capital originally invested."

The private secretary did so and showed him the result.

"It's a great deal more than I thought," said the plutocrat, "but that makes no difference. I shall proceed now to formulate a plan for the immediate restitution to the people of the vast sum I have wrongfully—"

But here, with a violent effort, he shook himself and awoke. It was only a dream.
